Read the source and answer the question.

I have found the earliest illustration of a cannon in the world, which dates from . . . around 1127, which was 150 years before the development of the cannon in the West. The Song . . . use of gunpowder was the reason it was able to hold off the Mongols for many decades. . . . After the introduction of the cannon and gunpowder to the West, Westerners very quickly became expert with cannons. They cast bronze cannons that were eventually much better than those the Chinese could produce.

— Robin D. S. Yates, McGill University
