- 15. The chart below describes information about two U.S. congressional acts passed during the 1930s.

Neutrality Act of 1937	Neutrality Act of 1939
The act barred foreign countries at war from buying weapons and ammunition from the United States. Only nonmilitary goods could be sold, and those countries had to pay with money and transport the goods in their own ships.	The act lifted the U.S. embargo on the sale of weapons and ammunition to foreign countries at war. All trade with foreign countries at war remained under the basis of “cash-and-carry.”

Based on this chart, why did President Franklin Roosevelt urge Congress to revise the Neutrality Act of 1937?

- Ⓐ President Roosevelt wanted to stimulate European trade while resisting increased calls for enacting tariffs.
- Ⓑ President Roosevelt wanted to aid European democracies while avoiding direct involvement in the growing conflict.
- Ⓒ President Roosevelt wanted to increase the country’s military readiness while keeping military spending at low levels.
- Ⓓ President Roosevelt wanted to increase the country’s economic output while easing government control of business activities.
