TIPS FOR TAKING THE TEST

Here are some ideas to help you do your best:

- Read the whole passage before you answer the questions. Most questions will only make sense after you read the whole passage.
- You might need to read the passage more than once to answer a question.
- Read each question carefully. Take your time.
- A question may include a quote from a passage. You might need to review both the quote and the whole passage to answer the question.

When you write your answers

- make sure to answer the whole question;
- use examples or details from the text;
- write in complete sentences; and
- use correct spelling, grammar, capitalization, and punctuation.

Excerpt from Why Do We Sleep?

by Trudee Romanek

1 Sleep has puzzled people for a long time. Why do we lie down and zone out for hours every night? Isn't sleep just a giant waste of time? Could we learn to do without it?

2 Now scientists are beginning to answer some of those questions. They've discovered that brains and bodies don't just shut down at night. Quite the contrary! At night, your body repairs itself and grows strong. Your brain is busy making memories and learning. Sleep is so useful that all animals do it. And without it, waking life would be impossible.

All Through the Night . . .

3 After lying down, most people take about 20 minutes to fall asleep. In the twilight zone between asleep and awake, your brain begins to drift. It muffles signals from the muscles and senses, ignoring information from the outside world. That can give you the odd sensation of falling. You aren't really—you're just falling asleep. . . .

4 As you slip into sleep, your heart slows down and you breathe more slowly. Your eyes shut, and your brain ignores ordinary sounds. That's why when you're sound asleep, you don't hear small noises or other things that might wake you up. The part of the brain that keeps you aware of time passing also switches off, so in the morning it feels like the night takes no time at all.

5 But your brain does not shut down at night. In fact, it gets quite active. It's got important jobs to do.

GO ON

Sleep, Dream, Repeat

6 You might think sleep is just . . . sleep. But in fact, you do several different kinds of sleeping, cycling through them several times through the night.

7 First is a light sleep. After about half an hour, your brain sinks into a deep sleep. During deep sleep, long, slow waves of electrical impulses move through the brain. These slow waves move all the important things you learned and did today from short-term memory into long-term memory. At the same time, you forget unimportant details like putting on your socks. That frees up space to learn new things tomorrow.

8 After about 20 minutes or so of slow-wave sleep, your sleeping brain shifts gears. It starts to look more awake—though it isn’t. In the next stage of sleep, your muscles go completely slack. Your body doesn’t move at all. But your eyes dart back and forth behind closed eyelids. This motion gives this kind of sleep its name—REM, for “rapid eye movement.”

9 During REM sleep, the brain is making connections. It links new experiences to old memories. It also bundles together actions you’ve been practicing, such as the motions of riding a bike, into a new, single muscle memory: ride bike. All this connecting triggers dreams—which can get pretty weird.

10 You cycle through stages of light, deep, and REM sleep every 90 minutes, over and over, all night long. At the beginning of the night, you do more slow-wave sleeping, while the brain cleans house. Toward morning, you get more REM sleep, as it builds new knowledge. That’s when the most vivid dreams happen.

Dream Yourself Smart

11 Why do we dream? Scientists aren’t completely sure, but they have some ideas.

- 12 Dreams might be a side-effect of memory making. While you sleep, your brain sorts through everything that happened during the day. It tries to link new experiences to old memories that are similar in some way. As it connects things, the “story-making” part of your brain turns them into a story, and you get a dream. . . .
- 13 When it’s sorting through the day’s memories, your brain pays special attention to anything that made you feel extra happy or scared or excited. In dreams, the brain can try out solutions to problems that are bothering you. Finding even a weird dream solution can make you feel more in control the next day.
- 14 Dreams can even help you learn. In one test, volunteers learned how to play a new game. That night, some of them were awakened whenever they entered REM sleep. The others were awakened the same number of times, but only during non-REM sleep. The next day, the people who got their REM sleep did much better at the game. The players who started out being worst at the game had the most dreams about it—and they improved the most.
- 15 So if you want to do well on that test, don’t stay up all night studying. Instead, get a good night’s sleep. That’s when your brain learns best.

STAGES OF SLEEP

Stages of Sleep	What Happens
Pre-Sleep	Eyelids feel heavy, but brain is actively preparing the body for sleep
Stage 1: Light Sleep	Feel drowsy, but can be awakened easily
Stage 2: Beginning of deep sleep	Muscles relax; breathing and heartbeat slows; body temperature falls
Stage 3: Deep slow-wave sleep	Blood pressure lowers, but body is unaware of temperature changes; might talk in sleep
Stage 4: Deepest sleep (also slow-wave)	Very hard to wake up and may be confused if awakened; might talk in sleep
REM (Rapid Eye Movement) sleep	Muscles are completely relaxed, though eyes move back and forth quickly; heartbeats quicken; breathing is irregular; dreaming

- 1 What does the word “muffles” mean in paragraph 3?
- A changes to a slow speed
 - B moves to a new stage
 - C causes things to get darker
 - D makes things difficult to notice
- 2 What is a central idea of the section “All Through the Night . . .”?
- A Falling asleep takes less than thirty minutes for most people.
 - B Odd feelings while falling asleep are normal.
 - C Time passes differently while falling asleep.
 - D Falling asleep is an experience that involves the whole body.
- 3 Which detail best expresses a claim the author makes about sleep?
- A “Sleep is so useful that all animals do it. And without it, waking life would be impossible.” (paragraph 2)
 - B “As you slip into sleep, your heart slows down and you breathe more slowly.” (paragraph 4)
 - C “During deep sleep, long, slow waves of electrical impulses move through the brain.” (paragraph 7)
 - D “In the next stage of sleep, your muscles go completely slack. Your body doesn’t move at all.” (paragraph 8)

4

Based on the article, how does REM sleep help people?

- A The eyes move back and forth while they are closed.
- B The brain links experiences and memories.
- C People can begin having strange dreams.
- D People sleep more deeply when it is almost morning.

How does the author organize the information in paragraph 14?

- A by stating a problem with sleep and then presenting a solution
- B by sharing a cause-and-effect situation when sleep is interrupted
- C by explaining the steps to learning a new game
- D by comparing how long people dream at night

Which sentence best describes how the chart adds to the information in the article?

- A It explains how sleep helps keep the body healthy.
- B It shares the steps to fall asleep easily.
- C It offers facts about how the body reacts to sleep.
- D It compares being awake to being asleep.

“Salvador’s Wallet”

by Mari LaFore

1 It was spring break for Dustin and a good day for an adventure. The railroad tracks looked endless so he decided to follow them. The sky was Easter egg blue. The fluffy clouds reminded Dustin of his favorite frosting, vanilla. The shiny, golden sun bounced happily in the sky.

2 “What is that in the grass?” he wondered. Was it a gigantic rock, or maybe a big, brown, sleeping turtle? He bent down to investigate!

3 “A wallet!” he exclaimed as he picked it up and peeked inside. It was full of all kinds of stuff! And a tiny photo of twin boys.

4 “Somebody lost this, I’ll bet! Mom will know what to do!” Off Dustin ran to their apartment.

5 “Well, let’s just look inside and see who owns this wallet,” Dustin’s mom, Marisa, said cheerfully. They emptied it onto their kitchen table and searched for a clue. There it was, a note written in crayon!

6 “We love you, Dad!—Carlos and Hugo.”

7 “This must be a wonderful man. His boys love him very much,” remarked Dustin’s mom.

8 “Look, mom, this picture must be of them and they look like they are my age. I wonder if they live around here,” Dustin said aloud as his excitement grew. Then they saw another clue, a driver’s license and now they knew the owner of that old, brown wallet was named Salvador!

9 “This card says their address is far away in a different city,” said his mom sadly. Now what would they do?

GO ON

10 Finally they found the best clue of all; a phone number on the back of Salvador's shiny, silver credit card.

11 "I will contact Salvador for you with the good news," said the kind lady who answered the phone.

12 The very next day Dustin's doorbell rang and when Dustin and Marisa answered the door, there stood a smiling man who introduced himself as Salvador!

13 "Thank you, Dustin. You are a fine young man," he said as he shook Dustin's hand, "I rode the train to my job here in your city and my wallet fell out of my pocket. I thought I would never see it again! My sons will be happy to meet you. We are coming here to spend the day at Rocket Land tomorrow, and I would like you and your mom to come with us if you can."

14 "That will be just fine," smiled Dustin's proud mother.

15 "Yeah, that sounds great! I can't wait to meet Carlos and Hugo," grinned Dustin as he said good-bye to Salvador.

16 "You did the right thing, sweetheart," his mom said softly as he ran into the kitchen just in time to see her putting the last bit of his favorite vanilla frosting on a big, chocolate cake and reaching out to give him a "proud mom" hug.

17 "Thanks mom! This has been the best adventure ever!"

18 The very next day Dustin and his mom heard their doorbell chiming loudly.

19 Dustin peeked through his living room window and there stood four smiling people and one tiny, excited Chihuahua dog.

20 "I'll get it," exclaimed Dustin as he ran and opened their front door.

21 "Hello, my friend," Salvador said to Dustin, "I would like you to meet my wife, Emerita, and my sons, Carlos and Hugo, and our dog, Chica. She's also excited to go to Rocket Land. We take her with us every year." Chica yipped loudly and jumped into the air when she heard her name.

22 “Please come in,” said Dustin’s mom. “We are ready to leave and I have packed us all snacks to eat on the way there. Now, what should I put in for Chica?”

23 “Don’t worry, we have plenty of doggie snacks for her in our van,” laughed Salvador.

24 “I baked cochinos and churros, and biscochitos for us too,” said Emerita. “They are delicious cookies and they are loved by everyone in our country.”

25 “I want to sit in the back seat with Hugo and Carlos,” said Dustin as he grabbed his jacket. Emerita and Marisa nodded their approval and the group climbed into the blue van headed for Rocket Land.

26 “Salvador’s wallet sure seems to be a magic friend maker,” smiled Marisa as they happily drove away.

19 How does the author organize the information in paragraphs 5 through 10?

- A by comparing each item that Dustin pulls out of the wallet
- B by giving the reasons why Dustin must search for the wallet's owner
- C by listing the order of events that lead to Dustin finding the wallet
- D by showing how the clues cause Dustin to find the wallet's owner

20 What do the details in paragraph 13 reveal about Salvador?

- A His belongings often get lost on the train.
- B He enjoys visiting the city where Dustin lives.
- C He is grateful for Dustin's act of kindness.
- D His family is very important to him.

21 Which statement best explains why Dustin claims, "This has been the best adventure ever!" in paragraph 17?

- A Dustin's actions lead to an invitation to Rocket Land with Salvador's family.
- B Marisa is proud and makes Dustin's favorite cake to celebrate.
- C Dustin has made the day pass quickly by searching for the owner of the wallet.
- D Salvador's wallet has many clues to help Dustin solve the mystery.

22 What does the word “approval” suggest as used in paragraph 25?

- A Everyone is ready to leave for Rocket Land.
- B Dustin is allowed to sit with Hugo and Carlos.
- C The boys may eat the snacks Emerita has baked.
- D The blue van will take everyone to Rocket Land.

23 Which sentence best states a theme of the story?

- A The best mysteries are solved using teamwork.
- B People in different cities can have a lot in common.
- C Helping others can bring surprising rewards.
- D Pets are important for bringing families together.

Rosa's parents are planning a big birthday celebration for her older sister, Susana. Rosa has disagreements with her family members as they prepare for the party.

Excerpt from Did You Hear About Rosa?

by Hannah Jones

- 1 I rode my bike up into the hills behind our house. The day was getting hot, and my T-shirt stuck to my back as I churned hard on the pedals. The sun was turning the Sangre de Cristo Mountains a rosy gold color.
- 2 My throat dried up, my leg muscles ached with fatigue, and my lungs felt like they were about to burst. Even so, I enjoyed making the steep but quick (ten-minute) climb to Miss Sabines' house. I was heading to a place that had always given me comfort for my troubles.
- 3 Miss Sabines is 70 years old, but to me she seems like a sister, an hermana. She has long silver hair in a braid down her back. All the other older women I know have either short hair or chin-length hair, but Miss Sabines has never cut hers. She enjoys braiding my hair, for she says its long, thick, wavy strands remind her of her own. My face is like hers, too. We both have round, chubby cheeks and big eyes like brown buttons. Now that Miss Sabines is older, her eyes have a ring of bluish white around the brown part, but they're shaped just like mine.
- 4 Miss Sabines and I have more in common than just our looks. We're both smart, but we also daydream too much. It's a big contrast from my sister Susana, who is very practical and hardly ever daydreams.

GO ON

5 Speaking of daydreams, I often fantasize about living in a house like Miss Sabines'. My family's house is bigger and fancier than Miss Sabines', but I'd trade a mansion for her little casa any day. It has a big garden, with beautiful desert plants and herbs growing everywhere, and a courtyard that has tiles painted bright colors, with sculptures, pinwheels, wind chimes, and lawn ornaments scattered throughout. There's a cat, who sleeps under a lemon tree in the corner of the garden, along with a parrot, Tío, meaning "Uncle," who sits on a perch by the kitchen door.

6 When I got to Miss Sabines' house, I took off my bike helmet and threw my bike down on the sandy strip outside her gate. I rattled her courtyard fence and called, "Are you there?"

7 "Rosita, is that you? What a nice surprise! Hold on a moment; I'm in the garden." The pleasant voice came floating across the courtyard walls, putting me instantly at ease. In a moment, Miss Sabines appeared at her rickety, rusty front gate. She had on a straw hat to shade her face, but as she approached, she took it off and grinned. I helped her unhook the tricky latch on the gate and immediately gave her a big hug.

8 "My, what did I do to deserve this?" Miss Sabines laughed, pulling away from the hug. She peered intently into my eyes. "You look troubled. What do you have to tell me?" she asked. . . .

9 I expected Miss Sabines to feel sorry for me and understand my problems, but instead she laughed. The laugh started in her belly, echoed in her chest, and came out her mouth like a low, happy rumble. At first I was confused; I thought maybe she hadn't understood me, but then she explained.

10 "Ah, pequeño pájaro," she said. "Little bird, you remind me so much of myself!" . . .

11 We passed the rest of the afternoon puttering around the house. Miss Sabines showed me some of her new plantings, we played with her pets, and I leafed through a collection of photographs by Ansel Adams, whom Miss Sabines calls a "poet of Southwestern landscapes." All of a sudden (or so it seemed), the June sun sank below the garden wall.

12 “Oh, no!” I gasped, looking at my watch. It read 5:55 P.M. “We’re having a party tonight, and I’ve been gone for hours!”

13 “Well, then, you’d better get home, muchacha!” Miss Sabines said.

muchacha = Spanish word for girl

14 I latched the gate, put on my bike helmet, and got on my bike. “Thank you for the talk, Miss Sabines!” I waved. “You’ll always be my hermana across time!”

15 Miss Sabines waved back. “I’m always available for advice,” she called out as I sped off down the hill.

Cal and Marie Callender married in 1924. After spending 20 years raising their son Don, Marie decided to start a career in cooking.

Excerpt from Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven

by Rebecca Felix

Baking Boom

- 1 Callender had become a skilled baker and cook while taking care of her family. In the 1940s, she decided to put these skills to work outside the home. Callender took a part-time job at a delicatessen. There, she made salads and hot foods.

delicatessen = store where you can buy food that is already made, such as a sandwich

- 2 Soon, the delicatessen's owner asked Callender to make pies. She baked the pies at home, using her own recipes. Then she brought the pies to the delicatessen. Customers loved the pies' light, flaky crusts and fresh fruit or cream fillings. The desserts were soon very popular. . . .
- 3 The demand for Callender's pies continued to grow. Soon, she could not keep up on her own. Callender spoke with her son and husband about helping her. The Callenders decided to turn making pies into a family business.

GO ON

Setting Up Shop

- 4 Callender also spoke with her boss about how busy she had become baking pies. He supported her decision to quit her job to focus on making pies full time. And he promised to buy pies from her for his restaurant. He even let Callender take the oven from his bakery to use in her new business.
- 5 With the oven and help from Cal and Don, Callender was ready to get to work. She planned to sell hundreds of pies to local restaurants each week. But making that many pies would require a bigger space than the Callenders' home kitchen.
- 6 The Callenders sold the family car. They used the money to fund the business. They rented a Quonset hut in Long Beach, California. The family also purchased baking equipment and supplies. . . .

Quonset hut = metal building originally used by the military that can be turned into a kitchen or office

- 7 The Callenders' success continued for the next 16 years. By then, they were baking thousands of pies each week. They made enough profit to buy better equipment. This included a commercial mixer that could mix the ingredients for many pies at once. The family also bought a new truck for delivering the pies to stores.

Excerpt from A Wedding-Cake Tale

by Julia Quay

- 1 Prune Macaroon, baker to the king, had a terrible dilemma.
- 2 “I’ll be ruined!” he cried to his friend Able Bloke, the tailor from next door. “The king will never hire me again—never! Just look at this!”
- 3 He thrust a drawing of a cake at the tailor. Not just any cake, but the fanciest, frilliest wedding cake Able had ever seen. It had eight towering tiers adorned with ribbons, lace, flowers, pinwheels, and countless tiny details.

adorned = decorated

- 4 “The king’s wedding is tomorrow,” Prune groaned, “and I’m supposed to make this wedding cake for his new queen. But I just heard from my poor mother, who lives three kingdoms away. She stubbed her toe on a large block of cheese and needs me to take care of her today. What will I do?” Pulling a floury handkerchief from his pocket, he broke into fresh tears. . . .
- 5 “Why don’t you let me make the wedding cake?” suggested Able. “I’ve spent hours watching you work on cakes, and I’ve picked up many tricks. You take care of your mother while I take care of the cake.” . . .
- 6 Able got right to work measuring and mixing ingredients in monster-sized bowls. He felt pleased with his progress as he poured batter into giant cake pans and slid them into the oven. . . .

GO ON

7 But the sugar paste was slippery and wouldn't hold its shape. Able mixed in more sugar to stiffen it, but it cracked and broke like fine china. By the end of the afternoon, he had only a pile of sugar shards and a white, gloppy lump of paste. . . .

shards = sharp pieces

8 "I should never have offered to do this!" he bellowed at the stones. "I'm not a baker—I'm a tailor!"

9 The last few words echoed off metal pots and pans, ringing in his ears. He repeated it to himself, slowly this time. Then he turned off the oven, picked up the drawing, and left. . . .

10 As morning broke over the kingdom, Able Bloke emerged from his workshop in a clean white chef's uniform. He was carrying the fanciest, floweriest, frilliest wedding cake the kingdom had ever seen. The villagers were amazed as he passed by. . . .

11 No one had guessed that Able had, in fact, made the cake entirely out of fabric, right down to the fine lacework and the petals on the flowers.

*This item map is intended to identify the primary analytic skills necessary to successfully answer each question on the 2025 operational ELA test. However, each constructed-response question measures proficiencies described in multiple standards, including writing and additional reading and language standards. For example, two-point and four-point constructed-response questions require students to first conduct the analyses described in the mapped standard and then produce written responses that are rated based on writing standards. To gain greater insight into the measurement focus for constructed-response questions, please refer to the rubrics shown in the Educator Guides.

Many people believe that it is important to do the right thing even if no one is watching. How do Dustin's actions in the story support this idea? Use two details from the story to support your response.

Possible Exemplary Response:

Dustin's actions in "Salvador's Wallet" are a great example of him doing the right thing with the wallet he found while he was exploring the train tracks. He was alone and could have kept the wallet for himself, instead he got help from his mom to return it to its rightful owner, who was glad to have it back. I know this because the story says "'let's look inside and see who owns this wallet,'" and they find "a driver's license and now they knew the owner of the old, brown wallet was named Salvador!" When the wallet is returned, Salvador told them "I thought I would never see it again!"

Many people believe that it is important to do the right thing even when no one is watching. Dustin's actions in the story support this idea. I know this because his first thought was to find the owner of the wallet and give it to them. I also know this because he was so dedicated to finding whoever owned the wallet he called them instead of just leaving it there. In the text, it states "Finally they found the best thing of all; a phone number on the back of Salvador's shiny, silver credit card." The text also states "Somebody lost this, I'll bet! Mom will know what to do!" These examples show how Dustin's actions in the story support this idea.

Yes it is very important to have integrity which means to do the right thing when no one is looking. Dustin's actions are able to support this claim this is known because as it states in the following paragraph which is paragraph 4. It shows that Dustin instead of doing the wrong thing he took it to a adult that can help with the situation instead of doing the wrong thing. It even states the following in paragraph 5 it states Dustin and his mom going through the wallet to find information on this person to help and return this man's wallet which is having integrity both Dustin and his mom acted the right way and the good way to this situation. That is how Dustin's actions support the claim to do the right thing when no one is looking.

In Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven, how does the organization of the article help the reader understand the events? Use two details from the article to support your response.

The organization helps the reader understand the events because they are all in order so the reader can understand what events were first or last. One detail is in paragraph 1, in paragraph 1 it explains what happens first when Callender had become a skilled baker and cook while taking care of her family. This detail shows what happens first in the excerpt and explains how she started off while baking and taking care of her family. Another detail is in paragraph 7, in paragraph 7 it explains that Callender's success continued for 16 years leading to make enough profit to buy better baking equipment. This shows how Callender's success grew and shows what happens at the end of the excerpt. In conclusion these details prove that the organization of the excerpt help show the important events in the story

In Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven, how does the organization of the article help the reader understand the events? Use two details from the article to support your response.

The organizations helps the reader understand the events because it's in the order going step by step. I know because, " Callender had become a skilled baker and cook while taking care of her family. In the 1940s, she decided to put these skills to work outside the home. Callender took a part-time job at a delicatessen. There, she made salads and hot foods". This shows me how the order is starting. This gives me the idea that, " The Callenders' success continued for the next 16 years. By then, they were baking thousands of pies each week. They made enough profit to buy better equipment. This included a commercial mixer that could mix the ingredients for many pies at once. The family also bought a new truck for delivering the pies to stores". This shows me the end of the order and how it would be easier to understand reading this rather than the events being mixed up making the reader confused in a way they don't want to read the book.

In A Wedding-Cake Tale, how do Able's actions in paragraphs 4 through 6 support a theme about being a good friend? Use two details from the story to support your response.

Possible Exemplary Response:

Able's actions in paragraphs 4 through 6 of A Wedding-Cake Tale support a theme of being a good friend by showing how he volunteered to make the cake for the king's wedding even though he is just a tailor because his friend needed help. When Prune, the king's baker and Able's friend, was worried "'I'll be ruined!'" he cried to his friend Able Bloke... "The king will never hire me again—never!" Able stepped up to help "'Why don't you let me make the wedding cake?" suggested Able." While Able was confident that he could bake a cake as he had seen Prune do it so many times, he still struggled, but as a good friend he found a way to make a cake out of fabric so he would not let Prune down.

In A Wedding-Cake Tale, how do Able's actions in paragraphs 4 through 6 support a theme about being a good friend? Use two details from the story to support your response.

In "Excerpt from A Wedding-Cake Tale," Able's actions in paragraphs 4 through 6 support a theme about being a good friend by showing how much he cares about Prune Macaroon, his best friend.

I know this because in the text, Able says, "I've spent hours watching you work on cakes, and I've picked up many tricks. You take care of your mother while I take care of the cake." This shows that Able's actions in paragraphs 4 through 6 support a theme about being a good friend because it shows that he pays attention to his friend and what he does/likes.

In the text, it says, "He felt pleased with his progress as he poured batter into giant cake pans and slid them into the oven." This shows that Able's actions in paragraphs 4 through 6 support a theme about being a good friend because it shows that Able feels proud that he will impress his friend with his baking skills.

All in all, in "Excerpt from A Wedding-Cake Tale," Able's actions in paragraphs 4 through 6 support a theme about being a good friend by showing how much he appreciates his friend.

[illegible]

Possible Exemplary Response:

It is common for people to set goals for themselves. In both “Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven” and “A Wedding-Cake Tale” the main characters have goals that they have set for themselves. Marie Callender and Able Bloke worked hard in different ways to achieve their goals.

While both Marie and Able wanted to be successful, the success they wanted was different. Marie’s goal was to start her own business so she could focus on making pies to keep up with all the orders. Able’s goal was to make a grand wedding cake so that he would not let down his friend, the baker, Prune Macaroon. They both worked hard to reach their goals using the tools that were available to them.

In “Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven” Marie used the trust that the people around her had in her skills to start her own pie business. She was also willing to make sacrifices to make the business better. “Callender spoke with her son and husband about helping her. The Callenders decided to turn making pies into a family business.” This indicates how her family was willing to support and aid Marie in making a successful pie business. Her old boss at the delicatessen supported her goals as well, the text tells us “he promised to buy pies from her for his restaurant. He even let Callender take the oven from his bakery to use in her new business.” Letting Marie have his oven to help her business take off shows that he thought she could make it, and was willing to help, even though he would likely lose some customers as people would be able to get the popular pies in other places. But Marie also made some sacrifices of her own, the text says “The Callenders sold the family car. . . They rented a Quonset hut. . . also purchased baking equipment and supplies.” This shows what Marie had to sacrifice to be able to afford to start her business and the hard work she was putting into it. In the end, her family trusted her skills, which paid off as she reached her goal, and their success continued for years.

In “A Wedding-Cake Tale” Able used what few baking skills he had to attempt to make a wedding cake for the king while his friend the baker was busy. He thought that he would be able to make a traditional cake for the wedding, “I’ve spent hours watching you work on cakes, and I’ve picked up many tricks.” While Able was confident and got right to work, he found that baking a cake and decorating a cake were two very different skills. After mixing the sugar paste it cracked “By the end of the afternoon, he had only a pile of sugar shards and a white, gloopy lump of paste.” His frustration in this failure was clear, as he says in the text, “I’m not a baker—I’m a tailor!” but this setback did not stop Able, it led him to realize he should stick to his strengths and work harder, the text says “Able Bloke emerged from his workshop. . . Able had, in fact, made the cake entirely out of fabric, right down to the fine lacework and the petals on the flowers.” This displays the hard work Able put into this unique cake, in first trying a new skill baking, to finally creating a cake tailor made to his skill set, fabrics. This may not have been the cake that Able planned to make, but it was still a grand wedding cake.

As you can see, in both “Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven,” and “A Wedding-Cake Tale,” the main characters have unique goals to start a successful pie business and to bake a cake for the king’s wedding. Marie and Able reached their own goals with the tools that were available to them, the help of others and by trusting themselves and their own skills.

- explain how Callender and Able work to reach their goals
- use details from both the article and the story to support your response

In both, "Excerpt from A Wedding Cake Tale" by Julia Quay and "Excerpt from Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maen," both shows a goal each character tries to reach and how they achieve it. In "A Wedding Cake Tale," Able Bloke volunteers to help make the wedding cake for the king, but she doesn't know how to bake. So, he made it out of fabric instead and then no one noticed that it was made out of fabric. In, "Homemade Pie Maven," Callender was a professional baker that wanted to start a baking business, so she started a business with her family and sold thousands of pies to local restaurants. Both take advantage of what they are or have to achieve a goal.

In, "A Wedding Cake Tale," Able Bloke was a tailor that tries to bake a cake for the king of the kingdom. Since she can't cook, she instead made it entirely out of fabric instead of baking it. She achieves this goal by using her skills as a tailor to make the cake. According to the text, it says, "'I should have never offered to do this!' he bellowed at the stones. 'I'm not a baker - I'm a tailor!'" This shows that Able decides to make the cake out of fabric instead of actually baking it. Also, it says, "No one had guessed that Able had, in fact, made the cake entirely out of fabric, right down to the fine lacework and the petals on the flowers." This explains that Able achieves her goal by using fabric, since she didn't know how to cook. To conclude, Able achieves her goal by using her skills as a tailor to make the cake.

In, "Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven" Callender was a baker that wanted to make a successful baking business. Callender decides to start a family business with her family to make pies to sell. She accomplished her goal by using her baking skills and improving their working space to make hundreds of pies, and sell it to gain profit. Based on the text, it says, "She planned to sell hundreds of pies to local restaurants each week and sold the family car to purchase baking equipment and supplies." This indicates that Callender wanted to sell pies, so she sold the car and bought supplies to make more pies. Also, it says, "The Callenders' success continued for the next 16 years. By then, they were making thousands of pies each week." This conveys that they became successful business workers and make many pies to sell to restaurants. To conclude, Callender achieves her goal by using her baking skills to make a successful business.

GUIDE PAPER 1b

Both characters achieve their goals by taking advantage of what they are to accomplish their achievements. Able takes advantage of her skills as a tailor to make a cake out of fabric. Callender takes advantage of her skills as a baker to run a successful business. According to, "A Wedding Cake Tale," it says, "He was carrying the fanciest, floweriest, frillest wedding cake made entirely out of fabric." This shows that Able achieves her goal by using her skills as a tailor to make a cake out of fabric. Also, in "Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven," it says, "They were baking thousands of pies each week. They made enough profit to buy better equipment." This conveys that Callender achieves her goal by using her skills as a baker to run a successful baking business. To conclude, both characters take advantage of what they are to accomplish their goals.

As you can see, both characters achieve their goals by taking advantage of what they are. In, "A Wedding-Cake Tale," Able uses her skills as a tailor to make a cake out of fabric for the king. In, "Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven," Callender uses her skills as a baker to run a successful baking shop. Both stories show how these characters could achieve their goals from taking advantage of who they are.

In your response, be sure to

- identify a goal that Callender tries to reach
- identify a goal that Able tries to reach

- use details from both the article and the story to support your response

In this story I will prove how Able and Callender both try to reach a goal.

In "Homeade Pie Maven", the goal Callender tries to reach is baking/making pies for a job/living. The text says, "Callender also spoke with her boss about how bust she had becaome baking pies, he supported her decision to quit her job to focus on making pies full time". This proves Callenders goal is to make pies. For instance, "Soon, she could not keep up on her own". This shows me a problem/difficulty that Callender had reached.

In the excerpt from "A Wedding-Cake Tale" a goal Able tries to reach is baking a eight tier wedding cake whilst his friend/the baker is out of town taking care of his poor mother who stubbed her toe on a large block of cheese. The text says, "Why don't you let me make the wedding cake?" suggested Able. "I've spent hours watching you work on cakes, and I've picked up many tricks. You take care of your mother while I take care of the cake". This shows Ables goal. Also, "I should have never offered to do this! he bellowed at the stones Im not a baker - Im a tailor!". This proves me that Able got stuck Callender reaches her goals by working together with her family and Able reaches his goal by working smart not hard. The text says, "Callender spoke with her son and husband about helping her the Callenders decided to turn making pies into a family bussiness ". This shows me Callenderd reached her goals with help of her family. Another deatail is, "As morning broke over the kingdom, Able Bloke emerged from his workshop in a clean white chef's uniform. He was carrying the fanciest, floweriest, frilliest wedding cake the kingdom had ever seen. The villagers were amazed as he passed by. . . .

As you can see, Callender reaches her goals by working together with her family and Able reaches his goal by working smart not hard, In the excerpt from " A Wedding-Cake Tale " a goal Able tries to reach is baking a eight tier wedding cake whilst his friend/the baker is out of town taking care of his poor mother who stubbed her toe on a large block of cheese, In " Homeade Pie Maven", the goal Callender tries to reach is baking/making pies for a job/living, and finally , In this story I will prove how Able and Callender both try to reach a goal. This proves how each character had a goal a problem and a soulution.

In Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven, what is a goal that Callender tries to reach? In A Wedding-Cake Tale, what is a goal that Able tries to reach? How do Callender and Able work to reach their goals? Use details from both the article and the story to support your response.

In your response, be sure to

- identify a goal that Callender tries to reach
- identify a goal that Able tries to reach
- explain how Callender and Able work to reach their goals
- use details from both the article and the story to support your response

Have you ever tried to reach your goal at something? Well, in the excerpts, "Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven" by Rebecca Felix and "A Wedding-Cake Tale" by Julia Quay, both main characters in the story try to accomplish their goal.

Both main characters have a goal that they want to reach. For example, in "A Wedding-Cake Tale", Able wants to try to make a wedding cake. The story shows this in paragraph 5, where it says, "Why don't you let me make the wedding cake?" suggested Able. "I've spent hours watching you work on cakes, and I've picked up many tricks. You take care of your grandma while I take care of the cake." which shows how his goal will be to make wedding cake while Prune is gone. Similarly, in the article, "Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven", in paragraph 3, it says, "The Callenders decided to turn making pies into a family business." which shows how her goal will be to make a business out of baking pies.

Both characters have goals and they manage to achieve their goals. For example, in paragraph 11 of, "A Wedding-Cake Tale", it says "No one guessed that Able had, in fact, made the cake entirely out of fabric, right down to the fine lacework and the petals on the flowers."

This shows how Able achieved his goal by making a cake out of fabric. Also, in paragraph 7 of, "Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven", it says "The Callenders' success continued for the next 16 years. By then, they were baking thousands of pies each week." This shows how both characters achieved their goals of making desserts.

Now that we have learned that they have both achieved their goals of cooking desserts, I think that there is a moral in both books. These characters both started out with coming up with their goals, but then, they worked hard and didn't give up and that is how they achieved their goals so the moral in each story is to not give up and to always keep trying.

In "Excerpt from Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven," a goal that Callender tries to reach is to sell pies. In "Excerpt from A Wedding-Cake Tale a goal that Able tries to reach is to make the cake. Callender and Able work to reach their goals by working hard to achieve them.

In "Excerpt from Marie Callender: Homemade Pie Maven," a goal that Callender tries to reach is to sell pies. One detail that proves this is "The Callenders decided to turn making pies into a family business." This proves that a goal that Callender tries to reach is to make pies because it proves that she was willing to start a business to do it. Another detail is "He supported her decision to quit her job to focus on making pies full time." This proves that a goal that Callender tries to reach is to sell pies because it proves that Callender wanted to quit her job to make pies.

In "Excerpt from A Wedding-Cake Tale a goal that Able tries to reach is to make the cake. One detail that proves this is "You take care of your mother while I take care of the cake." This proves that a goal Able tries to reach is to make the cake because it proves that Able wanted to take care of or make the cake. Another detail is "No one had guessed that Able had, in fact, made the cake entirely out of fabric, right down to the fine lacework and the petals on the flowers." This proves that a goal Able tries to reach is to make the cake because it proves that instead of giving up Able made a fabric version of the cake because she can't cook.

Callender and Able work to reach their goals by working hard to achieve them. One detail that proves this is "The Callenders sold the family car. They used the money to fund the business." This proves that Callender and Able reach their goals by working hard to reach them because it proves that Callender was willing to sell her car just to continue making pies. Another detail is "Able mixed in more sugar to stiffen it, but it cracked and broke like fine china." This proves that Callender and Able reach their goals by working hard to achieve them because it proves that Able, even though the paste was slippery kept trying to get it to hold its shape.

The stories "Excerpt from a wedding -cake tale " and "Excerpt from marie Callender homemade pie maven" both are about making a sweet treat and have a goal they try to reach in the two stories.

In the story "Excerpt from a wedding -cake tale" Able was trying to reach a goal and that goal to bake a cake for the king's wedding because the baker could't so Able offered to make the cake so his friend could keep his job.

Able worked to reach because ,he kept on trying when he ended up with a pile of sugar shards and a white lump of paste ,but the next morning he came out of his workshop with the fanciest cake the kingdom has ever seen because he did not quit. In the story "Excerpt from marie Callender homemade pie maven" Callender was trying to reach a goal to have her own pie making business because she likes making pie after her boss made her make pies.

Callender worked to reach a goal because ,her love for making pies grew so much that she wanted her own business so she sold the family car then used the money for their business which was a big sacrifice she made because she really wanted to have her own business to make pies .

These details support that Callender and Able had goals and how they have reached their goals.

The goal that Able has is to make the cake for the queen by tomorrow, but he was a tailor, not a baker. And the goal that Callender has is to make enough pies for the customers at her workplace. One detail for Able's problem is that she said "I should never have offered to do this!" he bellowed at the stones. "I'm not a baker—I'm a tailor!". This shows that he has problems making the cake- because he is a tailor. One detail to the solutions of Able's problem is how it says "No one had guessed that Able had, in fact, made the cake entirely out of fabric, right down to the fine lacework and the petals on the flowers." This shows that she used his skill to solve a problem of something he didn't know how to do. One detail for Callender's problem is how it says "The demand for Callender's pies continued to grow. Soon, she could not keep up on her own." This shows that she could now make enough pies in time. One detail on how she solved the problem is how it says "Callender spoke with her son and husband about helping her."
