55 Questions

Directions: Each of the questions or incomplete statements below is followed by four suggested answers or completions. Select the one that is best in each case and then enter the appropriate letter in the corresponding space on the answer sheet.

Source materials have been edited for the purpose of this exercise.

Questions 1 - 4 refer to the passage below.

“You should know that the said King of Portugal has leased this island to Christians for ten years, so that no one can enter the bay to trade with the Arabs save those who hold the license. These Christians have dwellings on the island and factories where they buy and sell with the said Arabs who come to the coast to trade for merchandise of various kinds, such as woolen cloths, cotton, silver and coarse cloth, that is cloaks, carpets, and similar articles and above all grain, for they are always short of food. The Arabs give in exchange slaves whom the Arabs bring from the land of the Blacks, and gold dust. The King therefore caused a castle to be built on the island to protect this trade forever. For this reason, Portuguese caravels come and go all year long to this island.”

Alvise de Ca'da Mosto, Venetian merchant, describing the Portuguese island of Arguim off the west coast of Africa, 1454

1. The licensing of trade described in the passage is an example of which of the following state policies?
 - (A) The monopolization of force by the state
 - (B) The preservation of regional autonomy and tax collection
 - (C) The implementation of mercantilism to promote the state's economic interests
 - (D) The development of new banking techniques to enhance commerce
2. The Portuguese slave trade described in the passage led most directly to which of the following?
 - (A) Columbus' voyages of exploration
 - (B) The development of new navigational technology
 - (C) The establishment of a European-dominated system of plantation agriculture
 - (D) The foundation of East Indies trading companies
3. Other European states reacted to the Portuguese establishment of a trading-post empire by
 - (A) developing their internal industries
 - (B) shifting their focus to trading in the Mediterranean
 - (C) increasing overland trade with the Ottoman Empire
 - (D) developing rival colonies and overseas trading networks
4. The long-term economic effect in Europe of the establishment of trading networks and colonies such as the one described in the passage was
 - (A) the increased power of trading centers in the Italian city-states
 - (B) a shift in the center of economic power from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic states
 - (C) the industrialization of Great Britain
 - (D) an increase in the cost of imported luxury goods

Questions 5 - 8 refer to the passage below.

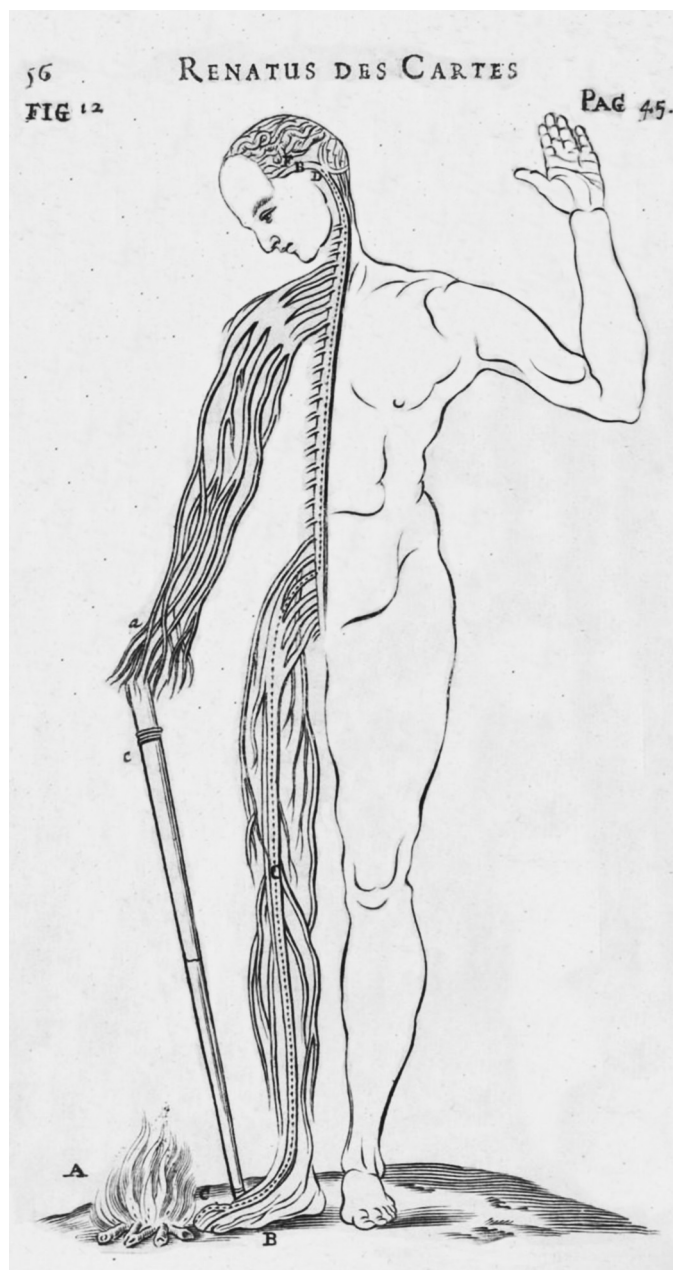

“I traveled to Montpellier [in southern France] and associated there with several Protestants who have close contacts with Spain in order to learn if they ship books to Spain or know any heretics there. In order to gather this information . . . I pretended to be a heretic myself and proposed to take some books, such as the works of John Calvin and Theodore Beza, to Spain. . . . A bookseller and a merchant volunteered to bring the books secretly to Barcelona to the home of one of their friends who was, as they said, of their faith. A thousand deceptions were necessary to gather this information. . . . I learned the names of all [Protestants] from the merchant, for he told me that they were of his religion. I am staying here . . . in the service of God and Your Majesty.”

Report by an agent of the Spanish Inquisition to King Philip II, 1566

5. Which of the following is best supported by the passage?
- (A) The Spanish government used agents of the Inquisition as ambassadors to neighboring countries.
 - (B) Barcelona was the center of Protestant activity in Spain.
 - (C) The Spanish government was producing religious treatises for the Catholic Reformation and sending them abroad.
 - (D) Owning and reading Protestant religious literature was illegal in Spain.
6. The events described in the passage best illustrate which of the following aspects of the religious conflicts in Europe in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries?
- (A) Catholics responded to the challenge of the Protestant Reformation by creating new religious orders to revitalize the Roman Catholic Church.
 - (B) The spread of Protestant ideas in France had already resulted in the French monarchs adopting a policy of religious toleration.
 - (C) Protestants made effective use of the increased availability of printing technology to spread their ideas.
 - (D) Despite doctrinal differences, Catholics and Protestants continued to live amicably together in many regions of Europe.
7. How did Philip II's religious policies illustrated in the passage compare to the policies pursued by other fifteenth- and sixteenth-century European monarchs?
- (A) Philip's policies were unique among European monarchs because Philip strongly supported Catholicism.
 - (B) Philip's policies enforcing religious uniformity were similar to the policies of other Habsburg rulers but different from the policies of most other ruling dynasties.
 - (C) Philip's policies controlling religious beliefs and practices were similar to the policies of most other monarchs at the time.
 - (D) Philip's policies were unusual among European monarchs because he did not proclaim himself the head of a national church.
8. Which of the following events marked the effective end of Spain's ability to act as a champion of Catholicism in Europe?
- (A) The Battle of Lepanto against the Ottoman Empire (1571)
 - (B) The outcome of the Thirty Years' War (1648)
 - (C) The Siege of Vienna (1683)
 - (D) The outcome of the Seven Years' War (1763)

9. The image demonstrates which of the following regarding scientific advances in early modern Europe?
- (A) They were made possible by the rediscovery of ancient Greek medical texts during the Renaissance.
 - (B) They used information obtained through dissection to reconceptualize the body as an integrated system.
 - (C) They provided experimental proof of the accuracy of Galen's humoral theory of disease.
 - (D) They were responsible for the sharp drop in mortality from epidemic diseases, such as the plague, in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.
10. Descartes' understanding of the human body, as shown in the image, is most similar to which of the following?
- (A) Newton's notion of a mechanistic universe
 - (B) Astrological notions of the impact of celestial bodies on human affairs
 - (C) Positivist notions about the perfectibility of human society through scientific progress
 - (D) Einstein's notion of the relativity of time and space

Source: Stephen Broadberry and Bishnupriya Gupta “The early modern great divergence: wages, prices and economic development in Europe and Asia, 1500-1800,” Department of Economics, University of Warwick, Coventry, 2003

11. Which of the following best explains the changes in wages for unskilled laborers indicated by the data in the table?
- (A) Migration from Europe to colonies in the New World
 - (B) Population growth in a relatively stagnant economy
 - (C) Increased competition between private firms and state enterprises for unskilled labor
 - (D) The increased ability of laborers to organize and act collectively
12. The pattern shown in the table was partly an effect of which of the following changes in the economy of western Europe?
- (A) The breakdown of traditional economic systems and the increasing commercialization of agriculture
 - (B) The decreasing importance of agricultural activity as a contributor to the overall economy
 - (C) The improvement of wages and working conditions for skilled laborers
 - (D) The declining importance of grain as a primary foodstuff
13. Which of the following was a long-term trend that emerged in response to the economic patterns represented in the table?
- (A) Western European national governments began to institute extensive programs of poor relief to offset the decline in wages.
 - (B) Western European women began to delay marriage to limit the number of children they would have.
 - (C) Western European workers began leaving cities and towns to seek better opportunities in the countryside.
 - (D) Western European farmers began to switch from producing nonfood crops to producing food crops.

Questions 14 - 16 refer to the passage below.

“From this moment . . . all Frenchmen are in permanent requisition for the services of the armies. The young men shall fight; the married men shall forge arms and transport provisions; the women shall make tents and clothes and shall serve in the hospitals; the children shall turn linen into lint [for bandages]; the old men shall betake themselves to the public squares in order to arouse the courage of the warriors and preach hatred of kings and the unity of the Republic.”

Decree issued by the republican government of France, August 23, 1793

14. The French government issued the decree primarily in response to
- (A) the use of new military tactics and technologies by opponents of the French Revolution
 - (B) the lack of female support for the ideals of the French Revolution
 - (C) domestic unrest and foreign aggression against the radical Revolutionary government
 - (D) opposition to the trial of the French royal family by the French government
15. In subsequent years, the French government used the institutions created by the decree to
- (A) attempt to spread French Revolutionary ideals throughout Europe
 - (B) start nationalist uprisings in countries outside of France
 - (C) encourage internal debate concerning the proper course of the revolution in France
 - (D) justify the granting of greater political and legal rights to women
16. Countries in the coalitions that opposed Revolutionary and Napoleonic France were most eager to adopt which provision of the decree?
- (A) The mass mobilization of children for the war effort
 - (B) The creation of nationally based mass conscript armies
 - (C) The formation of female nursing corps
 - (D) The promotion of public oratory by citizens in support of the government's cause

Questions 17 - 20 refer to the passage below.

“Among the various species or modifications of liberty, of which on different occasions we have heard so much in England, I do not recollect ever seeing any thing yet offered on behalf of the liberty of making one’s own terms in moneylending. . . . No man of ripe years and of sound mind, acting freely, and with his eyes open, ought to be hindered, with a view to his advantage, from making such bargain, in the way of obtaining money, as he thinks fit: nor, (what is a necessary consequence) any body hindered from supplying him, upon any terms he thinks proper to accede to. . . . You, who fetter contracts; you, who lay restraints on the liberty of man, it is for you to assign a reason for your doing so.”

Jeremy Bentham, Defence of Usury [Charging of Interest], 1787

17. Bentham’s argument in the passage is best explained in the context of the
 - (A) growth of mercantilism
 - (B) creation of joint-stock companies
 - (C) increasing use of credit for complex financial transactions
 - (D) development of England’s railroad and canal network
18. Bentham’s arguments concerning personal liberty reflect most closely the principles of the
 - (A) English Civil War
 - (B) Enlightenment
 - (C) Glorious Revolution
 - (D) Protestant Reformation
19. Which of the following economic thinkers would most likely agree with Bentham’s argument?
 - (A) Adam Smith
 - (B) Jean-Baptiste Colbert
 - (C) Karl Marx
 - (D) Robert Owen
20. Bentham’s argument exemplifies which of the following processes at work in eighteenth-century Europe?
 - (A) The shift from subsistence to commercial agriculture
 - (B) The expansion of cottage industry and the putting-out system
 - (C) Increased government debt as a result of frequent wars
 - (D) The loosening of traditional moral restrictions on economic activity

Questions 21 - 23 refer to the following passage from a 2008 historical study.

“The Industrial Revolution, with its technology-driven economic growth, long stood as a formidable barrier to any effort [by historians] to search for economic growth based on any other factor or in any earlier period. Yet . . . decades of work on early modern European [economic history] have fundamentally challenged the conventional belief in a growthless, traditional economy. It is now sometimes conceded that substantial economic growth occurred before the technological breakthroughs of the Industrial Revolution. . . . [Moreover, new data] on overall British economic performance during the classical Industrial Revolution era, 1760–1830, reduces [previous historians’] growth estimates by more than half. This slower macroeconomic growth bathes in a rather less luminous light the traditional arguments about the relative importance of technology in initiating modern economic growth in this era. It also reduces the contrast with earlier decades and thus makes pre-industrial Britain as well as several neighboring countries richer, more [developed] societies than has long been supposed.”

21. Which of the following best supports de Vries’ argument?
- (A) Before the advent of the steam engine, a dense network of canals and roads had been built in Britain in response to the growing commercialization of agriculture and manufacturing.
 - (B) England’s large deposits of easily accessible coal and iron ore gave it an early lead in industrialization.
 - (C) In countries where the process of industrialization started late, such as Prussia and Russia, the state had to take a much more active role in promoting economic growth than in countries that industrialized early.
 - (D) The new commercial elites of early modern Europe both competed with and sought to assimilate into traditional landowning and clerical elites.
22. The conventional view of pre-industrial economies as incapable of sustained economic growth was in part informed by which of the following assumptions?
- (A) Early modern Western Europe had a unique “European marriage pattern” of high age at first marriage and high rates of celibacy.
 - (B) Before the middle of the eighteenth century, the European population was subject to Malthusian crises.
 - (C) The expansion of overseas trade was crucial to Europe’s economic growth in the early modern period.
 - (D) Countries’ mobilization for warfare was key to economic development in early modern Europe.

23. Compared with a historian espousing the more traditional view of the Industrial Revolution as a truly transformative event, de Vries would be more likely to emphasize the importance of all of the following EXCEPT

- (A) the freeing of labor and capital from traditional restraints as a result of the breakdown of guild regulations
- (B) the increases in the size of the manufacturing workforce brought about by the growth of cottage industry
- (C) the growing demand for manufactured goods as part of the Consumer Revolution
- (D) the greater ability of inventors to profit from their inventions due to government support

Questions 24 - 28 refer to the passage below.

“If the [Catholic clergy], so long paid and honored for abusing the human species, ordered us today to believe that . . . the world is immovable on its foundations, . . . that the tides are not a natural effect of gravitation, that the rainbow is not formed by the refraction and the reflection of rays of light, and so on, and if they based their [arguments] on passages poorly understood from the Holy Bible, how would educated men regard these commands? And if they used force and persecution to enforce their insolent stupidity, would the term ‘wild beasts’ seem too extreme [to describe them]? . . .

This little globe of ours, which is no more than a point, rolls, together with many other globes, in that immensity of space in which we are lost. Man, who is an animal about five feet high, is certainly a very inconsiderable part of the creation; but one of those hardly visible beings says to another of the same kind who inhabits another spot on the globe: ‘Listen to me, for the God of all these worlds has enlightened me. There are about nine hundred millions of us little insects who inhabit the earth, but my ant-hill alone is cherished by God who holds all the rest in horror for all eternity; those who live with me upon my spot will alone be happy, and all the rest eternally wretched.’ . . . What madman could have made so ridiculous a speech?”

Voltaire, A Treatise on Toleration, 1763

24. The ideas expressed in the passage best illustrate which of the following about Enlightenment intellectuals?
- (A) Some of them believed that the discoveries of new science warranted new approaches to social and cultural issues.
 - (B) Some of them were accomplished scientists in their own right who made important discoveries.
 - (C) Some of them relied on new venues for spreading their ideas, such as salons and mass-produced inexpensive pamphlets.
 - (D) Some of them rejected religious belief altogether and turned to atheism.
25. Voltaire’s mockery of the notion of one true religion in the second paragraph of the passage is most directly influenced by which of the following?
- (A) Protestant challenges to the Catholic Church’s claim of monopoly on religious truth
 - (B) Ideas of legal equality and individual rights espoused by political theorists such as Locke and Rousseau
 - (C) Newtonian ideas of a deterministic and mechanistic universe ruled by mathematical laws
 - (D) Europeans’ deeper awareness of the world’s cultural diversity, gained through scientific exploration and travelers’ accounts

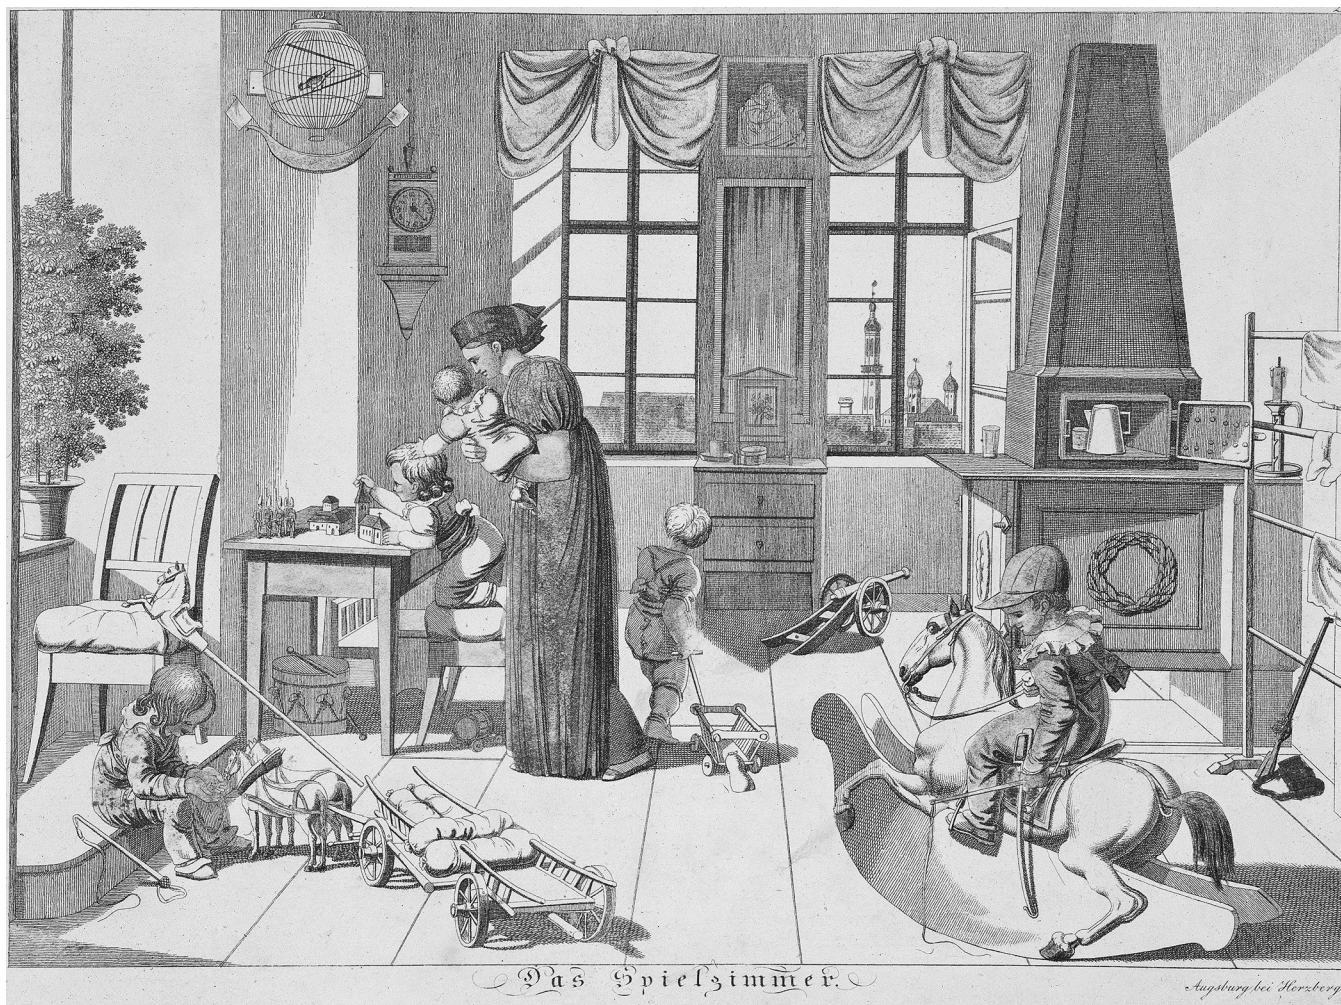

GO ON TO THE NEXT PAGE.

26. In addition to being informed by general principles, Voltaire's concern with promoting religious toleration was primarily relevant to supporters of the Enlightenment in eighteenth-century France because
- (A) the refusal of French monarchs to convene the Estates-General after 1614 had meant that the French people had no effective representation in setting government policy
 - (B) the revocation of the Edict of Nantes by King Louis XIV in 1685 had led to the persecution of members of the Protestant minority
 - (C) the failure of Diderot and d'Alembert to include religion in the scope of the Encyclopédie had provoked criticism of their work by members of the French clergy
 - (D) France's large Jewish population remained deprived of citizenship and civil rights
27. Compared with Luther's sixteenth-century critique of the Roman Catholic Church, Voltaire's critique in the first paragraph of the passage is
- (A) more focused on the corruption of the Catholic clergy
 - (B) more focused on challenging specific points of Catholic doctrine
 - (C) less reliant on using Scripture to challenge Catholic tradition
 - (D) less militant and more open to the possibility of reconciliation
28. Compared with a late-nineteenth-century Social Darwinist view of the world, Voltaire's view in the passage is
- (A) more skeptical of the ability of science to explain the natural world
 - (B) more accepting of the idea of a racial basis for the differences between European and non-European societies
 - (C) less reliant on notions of European cultural superiority
 - (D) less accepting of the idea that humans are rational animals

29. The material prosperity evident in Image 1 was in part attributable to which of the following?
- (A) The social welfare policies instituted by governments of the German states
 - (B) The increasing standard of living of German industrial workers
 - (C) The adoption by the Frankfurt Parliament of a liberal constitution for Germany
 - (D) The restoration of political stability in the aftermath of the Congress of Vienna
30. A historian of nineteenth-century European society is most likely to use Image 2 as evidence that
- (A) many women were increasingly taking on the role of decision-maker in their families
 - (B) many men were becoming more involved in child rearing and household management
 - (C) many men feared that women's participation in the public sphere would undermine the established social order
 - (D) many women used the revolutions of 1848 as an opportunity to express their sexuality more freely
31. In the late nineteenth century, the ideals of family life and gender roles reflected in the two images underwent which of the following transformations?
- (A) The ideals were largely superseded by socialist notions of collective child rearing.
 - (B) The ideals were increasingly adopted by working-class families.
 - (C) The ideals were modified to accommodate the fact that most women had become part of the paid workforce.
 - (D) The ideals were rejected by nationalists as incompatible with authentic folk culture.

Questions 32 - 34 refer to the passage below.

“I am your lord and my lord is the Tsar. The Tsar has the right to give me orders and I must obey, but not to give them to you. On my estate I am the Tsar, I am your god on earth and I must be responsible for you to God in heaven . . . First a horse must be curried [brushed] ten times with the iron curry-comb, only then can you brush it with the soft brush. I shall have to curry you pretty roughly and who knows whether I shall ever get down to the brush. God cleanses the air with thunder and lightning, and in my village I shall cleanse with thunder and fire, whenever I think it necessary.”

Russian estate owner addressing his serfs, 1847

32. The persistence of the social and economic system illustrated by the passage contributed strongly to which of the following?
- (A) High rates of mechanization in Russian agriculture
 - (B) High rates of emigration from Russia
 - (C) An increasing popularity of Utopian socialism among Russian peasants
 - (D) An increasing productivity gap between Russia and industrialized Europe
33. The passage provides evidence for which of the following features of Russian society?
- (A) The development of distinct new class identities based on labor
 - (B) The continued dominance of landowning elites
 - (C) New conservative ideologies based on a return to traditional authority
 - (D) Socialist-inspired ideologies based on government planning for society
34. The estate owner’s admonition that the Tsar cannot give orders directly to the serfs is best understood in the context of which of the following?
- (A) The assertion of Eastern Orthodox religious traditions
 - (B) The push by reformers to end serfdom
 - (C) Russia’s humiliation in the Crimean War
 - (D) Pressure by Western European abolitionists

Schools for girls	99	79	234	27
Coeducational schools	115	0	159	0
TOTALS	472	109	659	32

Source 2: Excerpt from a lecture for a civics course for boys' elementary schools, approved by the French Ministry of Education, 1883

“Children, one day you will be soldiers, just as today you are students. You owe military service to your country. In defending her, each of you shall defend your father’s home, the place where you were born, the community where you have lived, the patrimony that your parents have bequeathed you. And other things still: the laws that protect you, the benefits of civilization, as well as all that past of work and glory that has made France so great among nations. . . . If your mother is in danger and she calls out to you ‘Come to me, children!’ how is it possible not to come to her help? Think of France as the noblest of all mothers, who has suffered much and whose injuries have not yet healed!”

35. In 1881 and 1882, the French government passed laws making primary education free and compulsory for all children in France. Based on the data in Source 1, all of the following likely influenced French legislators in passing the laws EXCEPT a concern that
- (A) many children were not receiving any primary education
 - (B) educational opportunities for girls were lagging behind educational opportunities for boys
 - (C) supporting a large number of small schools was economically inefficient
 - (D) religious schools had become too prominent a part of the educational system
36. The two sources together best support which of the following statements about late-nineteenth-century European governments and public education?
- (A) Governments used the expansion of public education as an opportunity to promote nationalist sentiment.
 - (B) Governments viewed providing free compulsory education as a means of containing the spread of revolutionary ideologies such as socialism and anarchism.
 - (C) Governments used student performance in public schools to identify potential army recruits.
 - (D) Governments viewed education as an effective means of reinforcing family ties.

48. Which of the following was the main cause of the economic developments reflected in Table 1 ?
- (A) The successful implementation of the Marshall Plan
 - (B) The strong tradition of industrial development in Eastern European countries
 - (C) The beneficial effects of economic integration within the European Economic Community (EEC)
 - (D) The adoption of the Soviet model of rapid industrialization and economic planning by COMECON countries
49. Which of the following contributed the most to the overall pattern shown in Table 2 ?
- (A) Faster population growth in Eastern Europe than in Western Europe
 - (B) The “economic miracle” in Western Europe
 - (C) The formation of the European Union
 - (D) The arrival of large numbers of immigrant laborers in Western Europe
50. Which of the following is the most serious potential limitation of the data in the tables for assessing the comparative performance of European economies?
- (A) In 1938, all Eastern European countries, except for Czechoslovakia, had governments that were more or less authoritarian.
 - (B) Economic data may have been reported differently in the Eastern Bloc countries than it was in Western European countries.
 - (C) Since East Germany did not exist as a separate entity before the Second World War, the value of its industrialization index in Table 1 is hypothetical.
 - (D) Because of the Cold War, both Eastern and Western countries spent significant proportions of their GDP on their military forces.
51. The data in Table 2 most strongly suggest that
- (A) democratic governments were more successful in delivering economic prosperity to their citizens than nondemocratic governments were
 - (B) central planning failed to stimulate economic growth in countries where it was used
 - (C) extensive welfare benefits were a drag on economic performance in both Eastern and Western Europe
 - (D) countries that were part of multilateral military alliances, such as NATO and the Warsaw Pact, tended to perform better economically

SECTION I, Part B

Time — 50 minutes

4 Questions

Directions: Read each question carefully and write your responses in the Section I, Part B: Short Answer booklet on the lined pages provided for that question.

Answer all parts of every question. Use complete sentences; an outline or bulleted list alone is not acceptable. You may plan your answers in this exam booklet, but no credit will be given for notes written in this booklet. Only your responses on the designated pages of the Section I, Part B: Short Answer booklet will be scored. Sources have been edited for the purposes of this exercise.

Use the etching shown below, The Fair on St. George's Day (circa 1560) by Flemish artist Pieter Bruegel the Elder, to answer all parts of the question that follows.

The Fair on St. George's Day, c.1559-60 (etching and engraving, 1st state), Bruegel, Pieter the Elder (c.1525-69) (after) / Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, Texas, USA / Gift of Miss Annette Finnigan / The Bridgeman Art Library

1. a) Briefly analyze how the subject of the etching reflects artistic trends in sixteenth-century Europe.
- b) Based on the painting and your knowledge of European history, briefly analyze TWO features of European leisure activities in the period from the mid-fifteenth to the mid-seventeenth century.

“The First World War was a tragic and unnecessary conflict. Unnecessary because the train of events that led to its outbreak might have been broken at any point during the five weeks of crisis that preceded the first clash of arms, had prudence or common goodwill found a voice; tragic because the [war] ended the lives of ten million human beings, tortured the emotional lives of millions more, destroyed the benevolent and optimistic culture of the European continent and left . . . a legacy of political rancor and racial hatred. . . . The Second World War . . . was the direct outcome of the First.”

“The First World War solved some problems and created others; in doing so it was little different from any other war. . . . [Since the late 1920s] one interpretation of the war [as unnecessary and tragic] has increasingly dominated over all others. This has created a barrier between our understanding of the war and that of those who fought in it. . . . Many of the ideologies which had given the war meaning became loaded with later connotations. . . . But there is no inevitability linking the Treaty of Versailles . . . to the outbreak of the Second World War. The First World War broke empires, triggered the Russian Revolution, forced a reluctant United States on to the world stage, and revived liberalism. . . . It was emphatically not a war without meaning or purpose.”

Hew Strachan, The First World War, 2003

4. a) Explain ONE major difference between Keegan’s and Strachan’s interpretations of the role of the First World War in European history.
- b) Provide ONE piece of evidence from the period between the First and the Second World Wars that supports Keegan’s interpretation (Source 1) and explain HOW it supports the interpretation.
- c) Provide ONE piece of evidence from the period between the First and the Second World Wars that supports Strachan’s interpretation (Source 2) and explain HOW it supports the interpretation.

SECTION II

Total Time—1 hour, 30 minutes

Question 1 (Document-Based Question)

Suggested reading and writing time: 55 minutes

It is suggested that you spend 15 minutes reading the documents and 40 minutes writing your response.

Note: You may begin writing your response before the reading period is over.

Directions: Question 1 is based on the accompanying documents. The documents have been edited for the purpose of this exercise.

In your response you should do the following.

- Thesis: Present a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim and responds to all parts of the question. The thesis must consist of one or more sentences located in one place, either in the introduction or the conclusion.
- Argument Development: Develop and support a cohesive argument that recognizes and accounts for historical complexity by explicitly illustrating relationships among historical evidence such as contradiction, corroboration, and/or qualification.
- Use of the Documents: Utilize the content of at least six of the documents to support the stated thesis or a relevant argument.
- Sourcing the Documents: Explain the significance of the author's point of view, author's purpose, historical context, and/or audience for at least four documents.
- Contextualization: Situate the argument by explaining the broader historical events, developments, or processes immediately relevant to the question.
- Outside Evidence: Provide an example or additional piece of specific evidence beyond those found in the documents to support or qualify the argument.
- Synthesis: Extend the argument by explaining the connections between the argument and ONE of the following.
 - A development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area.
 - A course theme and/or approach to history that is not the focus of the essay (such as political, economic, social, cultural, or intellectual history).
 - A different discipline or field of inquiry (such as economics, government and politics, art history, or anthropology).

1. Analyze how European views of non-European peoples and cultures reflected the intellectual changes of the period from the 1760s to the 1910s.

Source: William Smith, British soldier, eyewitness account of a 1764 British punitive expedition against rebellious Native American groups in the Ohio country, 1766.

Since [the terms of the truce] demanded that the Indians release all White prisoners in their possession . . . most of these prisoners arrived in our camp, amounting to 206. . . .

There were to be seen fathers and mothers recognizing and clasping their once-lost babes; husbands hanging around the necks of their newly-recovered wives; sisters and brothers unexpectedly meeting together after long separation, scarce able to speak the same language.

The Indians too, as if wholly forgetting their usual savageness, bore an important part in heightening this most affecting scene. They delivered up their beloved captives with the utmost reluctance; shed torrents of tears over them, recommending them to the care and protection of the commanding officer. They visited them from day to day; and brought them what corn, skins, horses, and other matters they had bestowed on them, while in their families. . . .

Those qualities in savages challenge our just esteem. They should make us charitably consider their barbarities as the effects of wrong education, and false notions of bravery and heroism; while we should look on their virtues as sure marks that nature has made them fit subjects of cultivation as well as us. Cruel and unmerciful as they are, by habit and long example in war, yet whenever they come to give way to the native dictates of humanity, they exercise virtues which Christians need not blush to imitate.

Source: Chactaw, a fictional Native American character in Atala, a novel by the French writer François-René de Chateaubriand, published in 1801.

[After my father was killed] . . . an old Spaniard in the town of St. Augustine [in Florida], named Lopez, touched with my youth and simplicity, offered me an asylum. He took the greatest care of my education; and procured me the best instructors in the various branches of science.

But after passing thirty moons in this manner, I began to be disgusted with social life. I grew pale and emaciated. Sometimes I stood for whole hours immovable, contemplating the far distant forests, rising into mountains to the clouds. Sometimes they found me seated on the banks of a river, regarding its gentle current in melancholy silence.

Being unable any longer to resist the desire of returning to the wilderness, I appeared one morning before Lopez, in my savage dress, holding in one hand my bow and arrows, and in the other my European garments. These I returned to my generous benefactor, at whose feet I fell, shedding a torrent of tears, accusing myself of ingratitude. At length, I cried: “Oh my father, thou thyself knowest that, unless I enter again upon my wandering life after the Indian manner, I certainly shall die.”

Lopez, . . . seeing I was resolved to encounter every danger, clasped me in his arms, and, with tears in his eyes, exclaimed: “Go, magnanimous child of nature! Enjoy this invaluable independence of man! Were I a few years younger, I would myself accompany thee to the wilderness.”

Source: Jules Ferry, French prime minister, speech to the Chamber of Deputies, July 1885.

The superior races have a duty to civilize the inferior races. In the history of earlier centuries these duties have often been misunderstood; and certainly when the Spanish soldiers and explorers introduced slavery into Central America, they did not fulfill their duty as men of a higher race. But, in our time, I maintain that European nations acquit themselves with generosity, and with sincerity of this civilizing duty. Could anyone deny that there is more justice, more order, more equity, more social virtue in North Africa now that France has conquered it? . . . Is it possible to deny that it would be a great fortune for the hapless inhabitants of equatorial Africa to fall under the protection of the French or the English nation? Hasn't it been our first priority in these places to combat the human trafficking of Africans, and the infamy of slavery? . . .

Gentlemen, in Europe such as it is today, in this competition of the many rivals we see rising up around us, . . . a policy of withdrawal or abstention [from imperial expansion] is simply the high road to ruin! . . . Spreading our light without acting, without taking part in the affairs of the world, seeing all expansion into Africa or the Orient either as a trap or as a mere adventure: for a great nation to live in this way, believe me, is to abdicate its responsibilities. . . . One cannot suggest that France should conform to the same political ideals as a free Belgium or a republican Switzerland. There is something else about France—she cannot afford to be just a free country, she must also be a great country. She must spread her influence over the world and export wherever she can her language, her ways, her flag, her force of arms, her genius!

Competition makes some nations and races powerful and brings other, backward nations and races into decline. Compared to the constant and imminent threat of being outcompeted [by another human group], other threats in Nature pale in significance. In our present time, we can observe entire races of people dying out, races whose hunting grounds and other subsistence resources have been taken away by the White race and whose venerable religious and moral traditions have been destroyed. . . . The unheard of interconnectedness of the last century has brought some backward peoples to the brink of extinction. Over the course of the last five hundred years, all native peoples of the world’s continents and islands have been discovered by Europeans. These native peoples were only viable for as long as they remained unknown, shielded from competition with the superior European race.

Source: Evelyn Baring, Earl of Cromer, British consul general in Egypt and effective ruler of the country from 1883 to 1907, Modern Egypt, memoir, published 1908.

The European is a close reasoner; his statements of fact are devoid of ambiguity; he is a natural logician; he loves symmetry in all things; he is by nature skeptical and requires proof before he can accept the truth of any proposition. The mind of the Oriental, on the other hand, like his picturesque streets, is eminently wanting in symmetry. His reasoning is of the most slipshod description. . . . Endeavor to elicit a plain statement of facts from an ordinary Egyptian. His explanation will generally be lengthy, and wanting in lucidity. He will probably contradict himself half-a-dozen times before he has finished his story. . . .

Nevertheless, there is one saving clause, which serves in some respects as a bond of union between the two races. Once explain to an Egyptian what he is to do, and he will assimilate the idea rapidly. He is a good imitator, and will make a faithful, even sometimes a too servile copy of the work of his European teacher. His civilization may be a veneer, yet he will readily adopt the letter, the catchwords and jargon, if not the spirit of European administrative systems. His movements will, it is true, be not infrequently those of an automaton, but a skillfully constructed automaton may do a great deal of useful work. . . . So long as British supervision is maintained, the Egyptian will readily copy the practices and procedures of his English teachers. On the other hand, inasmuch as the Egyptian has but little power of initiation, and often does not thoroughly grasp the reasons why his teachers have impelled him in certain directions, a relapse will ensue if British supervision be withdrawn.

Suggested writing time: 35 minutes

Directions: Choose EITHER question 2 or question 3.

In your response you should do the following.

- Thesis: Present a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim and responds to all parts of the question. The thesis must consist of one or more sentences located in one place, either in the introduction or the conclusion.
 - Application of Historical Thinking Skills: Develop and support an argument that applies historical thinking skills as directed by the question.
 - Supporting the Argument with Evidence: Utilize specific examples of evidence to fully and effectively substantiate the stated thesis or a relevant argument.
 - Synthesis: Extend the argument by explaining the connections between the argument and ONE of the following.
 - A development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area.
 - A course theme and/or approach to history that is not the focus of the essay (such as political, economic, social, cultural, or intellectual history).
 - A different discipline or field of inquiry (such as economics, government and politics, art history, or anthropology).

Multiple-Choice and Short-Answer Section

In Section I, there are 55 multiple-choice questions (Part A) and four short-answer questions (Part B). Part A is organized into sets of three to five questions that ask students to respond to stimulus material (i.e., a primary or secondary source, including texts, images, charts, graphs, maps, etc.). This stimulus material will reflect the types of evidence that historians use in their research on the past.

Part B consists of four short-answer questions that require students to use historical thinking skills and content knowledge to respond to stimulus material, a historian's argument, or a general proposition or question about European history. These questions address one or more of the thematic learning objectives for the course and allow students flexibility in illustrating their answers using evidence explored during classroom instruction.

Curriculum Framework Alignment and Rationales for Questions 1–55

Question 1

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
INT-6 Assess the role of overseas trade, labor, and technology in making Europe part of a global economic network and encouraging the development of new economic theories and state policies.		Continuity and Change	1.4 I B
(A)	This option is incorrect. Though early modern states did begin to bring military force under central control, the passage primarily addresses commercial, not military, issues.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Early modern monarchies did face regional challenges; however, the passage deals with state control over economic policies and practices.
(C)	This option is correct. The passage refers to state control of trade and the granting of monopolies to specific groups for purposes of controlling commerce. These are characteristics of mercantilist policies.
(D)	This option is incorrect. New banking techniques developed during this era, however, the passage does not address banking and finance, but rather trade.

Question 2

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
INT-9 Assess the role of European contact on overseas territories through the introduction of disease, participation in the slave trade and slavery, effects on agricultural and manufacturing patterns, and global conflict.		Causation	1.4 IV C
(A)	This option is incorrect. Though the Portuguese slave trade in Africa existed before Columbus's voyages, it did not lead directly to the Spanish monarchy's sponsoring of Columbus.
(B)	This option is incorrect. The development of new navigational technologies preceded and/or coincided with the type of colonial efforts described in the passage.
(C)	This option is correct. European involvement in the African slave trade, along with control of the Americas and Caribbean, led directly to the establishment of plantation economies focused on production of sugar, cotton, rice, and other agricultural products.
(D)	This option is incorrect. The slave trade was focused on Africa, not the East Indies; therefore, establishment of trading companies would be only indirectly related to the slave trade.

Question 3

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
INT-1 Assess the relative influence of economic, religious, and political motives in promoting exploration and colonization. INT-11 Explain how European expansion and colonization brought non-European societies into global economic, diplomatic, military, and cultural networks.		Causation	1.4 III C
(A)	This option is incorrect. Internal manufacturing sponsored by the state was limited in the early modern period; the primary focus was on trade and colonial exploitation.
(B)	This option is incorrect. With the establishment of direct access to trade in Asia, Africa, and the Americas, the strategic importance of the Mediterranean began to wane.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Bypassing Ottoman intermediaries in the trade with Asia was a primary goal of European exploration and colonization.
(D)	This option is correct. Spain, and later France, England, and the Netherlands, all sought to establish colonial control of the Americas, the African coast, and parts of Asia in an effort to reap the benefits of commercial wealth, leading to rivalry and conflict.

Question 4

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-1 Explain how and why wealth generated from new trading, financial, and manufacturing practices and institutions created a market and then a consumer economy.		Causation	1.4 IV A
(A)	This option is incorrect. Because of its internal political disunity and lack of direct access to trade routes in Asia and the Americas, Italy's economic importance declined around 1500.
(B)	This option is correct. With the Atlantic states' direct access to overseas trade, the economic importance of Mediterranean trade networks gradually declined.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Though some of the capital Britain earned from overseas trade was later invested in industrial enterprises, this development was centuries away and only indirectly related to the trade described in the passage.
(D)	This option is incorrect. More direct access to the silks and spices of the Indies increased the supply of luxury goods and therefore drove down their prices.

Question 5

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
OS-2 Analyze how religious reform in the 16th and 17th centuries, the expansion of printing, and the emergence of civic venues such as salons and coffee houses challenged the control of the church over the creation and dissemination of knowledge. OS-3 Explain how political revolution and war from the 17th century on altered the role of the church in political and intellectual life and the response of religious authorities and intellectuals to such challenges.		Historical Argumentation	1.1 II B 1.2 I A
(A)	This option is incorrect. Ambassadors worked in an official capacity, and this report is clearly referencing clandestine actions taken to find out how Protestant literature was entering Spain. Further, sovereign nations would be unlikely to tolerate the actions of a foreign power interfering with their internal religious policies.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Though Barcelona is referenced as a place receiving “heretical” tracts, we cannot tell from the passage whether it was necessarily the center of such activities.
(C)	This option is incorrect. The report addresses Protestant publications entering Spain from abroad, not the Counter-Reformation publications produced in Spain.
(D)	This option is correct. The subterfuge to which the agent has to resort and his employment by the Spanish Inquisition — an organization charged with upholding Catholic orthodoxy — both support the conclusion that owning Protestant literature was illegal in Spain.

Question 6

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
OS-2 Analyze how religious reform in the 16th and 17th centuries, the expansion of printing, and the emergence of civic venues such as salons and coffee houses challenged the control of the church over the creation and dissemination of knowledge.		Contextualization	1.1 II B
(A)	This option is incorrect. The Catholic Church did create new religious orders to revitalize faith and combat Protestantism, but the passage does not address this development.
(B)	This option is incorrect. At the time of this report (1566) France was embroiled in violent religious conflict between Catholics and Protestants. Toleration of Protestant religious practices became state policy with the Edict of Nantes (1598).
(C)	This option is correct. A key reason for the success of Protestantism's spread was the printing press, which is indirectly referenced in the report.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Both the passage (with reference to “heretics”) and the context of the ongoing religious wars (1517–1648) contradict the notion of Protestants and Catholics living amicably together.

Question 7

Learning Objectives	Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
SP-2 Explain the emergence of and theories behind the New Monarchies and absolutist monarchies, and evaluate the degree to which they were able to centralize power in their states. SP-3 Trace the changing relationship between states and ecclesiastical authority and the emergence of the principle of religious toleration.	Comparison	1.3 II A
(A)	This option is incorrect. Many other rulers also supported Catholicism, particularly the Austrian Habsburgs in the Holy Roman Empire.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Most mid-16th-century European rulers pursued policies that sought to establish or enforce religious uniformity of one sort or another in their domains.
(C)	This option is correct. Philip was the foremost supporter of Catholicism politically, but in attempting to control religion internally and enforce state control of religion, he shared many of the same attitudes and policies as contemporaries such as Elizabeth I of England.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Though Philip exercised a significant degree of political control over religion, he did not challenge the Pope's position as head of the church.

Question 8

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
OS-3 Explain how political revolution and war from the 17th century on altered the role of the church in political and intellectual life and the response of religious authorities and intellectuals to such challenges. SP-15 Assess the impact of war, diplomacy, and overseas exploration and colonization on European diplomacy and balance of power until 1789.		Periodization	1.3 III B 2.1 III A
(A)	This option is incorrect. The Battle of Lepanto represented a major Spanish victory that temporarily diminished the Ottoman challenge in the eastern Mediterranean.
(B)	This option is correct. Spain's involvement in the Thirty Years' War furthered its political, military, and economic decline. Along with population stagnation and internal revolt, Spain's inability to secure its objectives in Europe's last major religious war caused it to slip into the second tier of European powers.
(C)	This option is incorrect. The defeat of the second Ottoman siege of Vienna was a major victory for the Austrian, not Spanish, Habsburgs that effectively eliminated the Ottomans as a threat to central Europe.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Spain had already fallen into the ranks of the second-tier powers by 1763, and the Treaty of Paris had a more serious impact on the strategic position of France, not Spain.

Question 9

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
OS-5 Analyze how the development of Renaissance humanism, the printing press, and the scientific method contributed to the emergence of a new theory of knowledge and conception of the universe.		Contextualization	1.1 IV B
(A)	This option is incorrect. Many scientific discoveries during the 16th and 17th centuries directly challenged the views of ancient thinkers such as Aristotle, Galen, and Ptolemy.
(B)	This option is correct. With the Scientific Revolution, anatomical knowledge came to be based on empirical data derived from direct observation of the human body, including through dissection.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Anatomical discoveries, such as Harvey's theory of blood flow, undermined Galen's humoral conception of the body.
(D)	This option is incorrect. New knowledge of the human body did not lead to the ability to prevent or cure infectious diseases (the biggest killers) until the advent of vaccination and the germ theory in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Question 10

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
OS-5 Analyze how the development of Renaissance humanism, the printing press, and the scientific method contributed to the emergence of a new theory of knowledge and conception of the universe.		Comparison	1.1 IV A
(A)	This option is correct. The illustration presents the body as a biological machine, made of parts and predictable patterns of interaction, much like the Newtonian conception of the universe.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Though astrology remained influential alongside the new science, the illustration provides no references to this.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Positivism did not develop until the 19th century.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Einstein's theories did not develop until the early 20th century, well outside the time period indicated by the illustration.

Question 11

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
PP-9 Assess how peasants across Europe were affected by and responded to the policies of landlords, increased taxation, and the price revolution in the early modern period.		Causation	1.5 II A 1.5 II B
(A)	This option is incorrect. Migration to the colonies occurred in limited numbers during this period, but it did not have a significant effect on wages and prices in Europe.
(B)	This option is correct. The data depict the effects of the price revolution, which was driven primarily by the steady population increase of the 16th century coupled with increased money supply. The result was an increased demand for limited resources and decreases in the purchasing power of wages.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Though states sponsored economic activities through mercantilism, the resulting enterprises were still primarily privately owned.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Outside of the guild system, which organized skilled laborers, there were no efforts or means for unskilled laborers to organize themselves. This development would not occur until the 19th century.

Question 12

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-2 Identify the changes in agricultural production and evaluate their impact on economic growth and the standard of living in preindustrial Europe.		Contextualization	1.5 II B
(A)	This option is correct. As traditional economic practices declined, new practices, such as enclosure and the movement toward cash crops, fueled the growth of a money economy, reflected in increasing prices.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Agriculture continued to be the most important sector in European economies throughout the early modern period and the vast majority of Europeans remained agricultural producers.
(C)	This option is incorrect. The phenomenon of falling wages held true for both skilled and unskilled laborers, as rising prices for agricultural commodities led to a decreased demand for manufactured goods.
(D)	This option is incorrect. The chart indicates the reverse; grain remained dominant as a foodstuff (still the largest portion of the European diet), and the ability to purchase it indicated one's economic position.

Learning Objectives	Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
PP-2 Identify the changes in agricultural production and evaluate their impact on economic growth and the standard of living in preindustrial Europe. PP-7 Explain how environmental conditions, the Agricultural Revolution, and industrialization contributed to demographic changes, the organization of manufacturing, and alterations in the family economy. IS-4 Analyze how and why the nature and role of the family has changed over time.	Causation	1.5 IV C 2.4 III A
(A)	This option is incorrect. Poor relief in the early modern period was typically administered by religious institutions, rather than national governments, and generally had a religious, rather than an economic rationale. Extensive government programs of poor relief did not begin until the late 19th century.
(B)	This option is correct. A major stimulus for the European marriage pattern was the desire to limit births during times of economic stress and thereby reduce the number of mouths to feed. The declines in the purchasing power of wages depicted in the chart contributed to this trend.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Cities continued to absorb migrants from the countryside in the early modern period, as many smallholders were driven off the land due to the emergence of commercial agriculture.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Nonfood crops, such as flax and hemp, had always accounted for only a small part of western Europe's overall agricultural output. That did not change significantly in response to the price revolution.

Question 14

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
SP-11 Analyze how religious and secular institutions and groups attempted to limit monarchical power by articulating theories of resistance to absolutism and by taking political action.		Contextualization	2.1 IV C
(A)	This option is incorrect. It was in fact the revolutionaries and Napoleon who introduced the use of mass citizen armies, war propaganda, and rapid troop movement.
(B)	This option is incorrect. In general women were no less supportive of the revolution than men, as evinced by the October Days and activities of sans-culottes women of Paris.
(C)	This option is correct. At the time the decree was issued, the French revolutionary government was at war against several European states and was facing a major internal revolt in the Vendée region of France. This decree of the National Convention intended to mobilize the entire nation in defense of the Republic.
(D)	This option is incorrect. It was the revolutionary, republican government that placed Louis XVI on trial and then executed him (January 1793).

Question 15

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
SP-16 Explain how the French Revolution and the revolutionary and Napoleonic wars shifted the European balance of power and encouraged the creation of a new diplomatic framework.		Continuity and Change	2.1 IV D
(A)	This option is correct. French revolutionary armies, supported by a politically engaged citizenry at home, spread the ideals of the revolution throughout Europe, establishing republican governments along the way.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Though revolutionary armies were spurred by French nationalism, their actions unintentionally stimulated anti-French sentiment abroad, leading to armed resistance against the French.
(C)	This option is incorrect. If anything, the Committee of Public Safety (effectively, the governing body of France at the time the decree was issued) stifled dissent and severely punished opponents of the regime.
(D)	This option is incorrect. In the years following the publication of the decree many economic and legal rights that women had won in the early stages of the revolution were curtailed, a process culminating in the adoption of the Napoleonic Civil Code.

Question 16

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
SP-13 Evaluate how the emergence of new weapons, tactics, and methods of military organization changed the scale and cost of warfare, required the centralization of power, and shifted the balance of power.		Causation	2.1 IV D 2.1 V B 2.1 V C
(A)	This option is incorrect. Most governments did not have the need or inclination to enlist children in the war effort.
(B)	This option is correct. The success of the French mass conscript armies spawned imitators across Europe, as governments attempted to conscript larger armies to fight off the French conquerors.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Female nursing corps were first seen during the Crimean War (1853–1856).
(D)	This option is incorrect. Most of the governments opposed to the French Revolution were conservative and thus suspicious of mass involvement in politics and appeals to public enthusiasm.

Question 17

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-1 Explain how and why wealth generated from new trading, financial, and manufacturing practices and institutions created a market and then a consumer economy.		Contextualization	2.2 I D
(A)	This option is incorrect. As a supporter of the free movement of property and capital, Bentham would have opposed the type of government interference in economic life represented by mercantilism.
(B)	This option is incorrect. The joint-stock company as a new form of economic association appeared in England in the late 16th and early 17th centuries, significantly predating Bentham's writing.
(C)	This option is correct. During the time of Bentham's writing, England was beginning to experience the Industrial Revolution, which was facilitated by new financial institutions and practices that allowed for a greater use of credit in economic transactions. Bentham argues for a laissez-faire approach to the movement of capital.
(D)	This option is incorrect. The first railroads in Britain were built in the 1820s and 1830s, after the passage was written.

Question 18

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
SP-4 Analyze how new political and economic theories from the 17th century and the Enlightenment challenged absolutism and shaped the development of constitutional states, parliamentary governments, and the concept of individual rights.		Contextualization	2.3 III B
(A)	This option is incorrect. Puritan leaders during the English Civil War increased government regulation of morals, unlike the ideas presented in the passage by Bentham.
(B)	This option is correct. Enlightenment thinkers emphasized that natural laws guided both natural and human phenomena and distrusted arbitrary rules that interfered with personal freedom.
(C)	This option is incorrect. The principles of the Glorious Revolution relate mostly to political representation and constitutionalism, rather than to notions of personal or economic liberty.
(D)	This option is incorrect. The Protestant Reformation occurred in the 16th century, well before Bentham's writing; further, both Protestant and Catholic leaders generally supported laws against usury.

Question 19

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
SP-4 Analyze how new political and economic theories from the 17th century and the Enlightenment challenged absolutism and shaped the development of constitutional states, parliamentary governments, and the concept of individual rights.		Comparison	2.3 III B
(A)	This option is correct. Adam Smith developed the intellectual framework for laissez-faire capitalism, the free movement of goods and services, with little if any government interference. Bentham's ideas on usury reflect these principles.
(B)	This option is incorrect. As the leading advocate of mercantilism, Colbert would have supported the power of the government to control economic activities to serve its interests, counter to the sentiments in Bentham's writing.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Marx established a "scientific" version of socialism, advocating the idea of government ownership/control of the means of production for the benefit of workers. In contrast, Bentham argues for free private contracts and profits for individuals.
(D)	This option is incorrect. As a utopian socialist, Owen argued that private economic activity should have as its goal the material and moral betterment of workers, not an idea supported by Bentham's free-market philosophy.

Question 20

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-1 Explain how and why wealth generated from new trading, financial, and manufacturing practices and institutions created a market and then a consumer economy.		Continuity and Change	2.2 I A
(A)	This option is incorrect. Though a shift to commercial agriculture did occur during this era, this process was driven more by scientific principles and technology and less by the type of financial activities described by Bentham.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Cottage industry did expand during the 18th century, but it did not generally involve the type of transactions mentioned in the passage.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Britain's debt did increase during this period, but the passage deals with private contracts and not with government bonds or banknotes.
(D)	This option is correct. With the decline of guilds, spread of Enlightenment thought, and the expansion of profit-driven market forces, the traditional “moral” economy of early modern Europe had been undermined.

Question 21

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
PP-1 Explain how and why wealth generated from new trading, financial, and manufacturing practices and institutions created a market and then a consumer economy. PP-2 Identify the changes in agricultural production and evaluate their impact on economic growth and the standard of living in preindustrial Europe. PP-3 Explain how geographic, economic, social, and political factors affected the pace, nature, and timing of industrialization in western and eastern Europe.		Historical Argumentation Interpretation	2.2 I A 2.2 I B 2.2 I C
(A)	This option is correct. Canals were not a “technological breakthrough” of the Industrial Revolution (canal building dates back to the ancient world), but they did support the substantial agricultural and commercial growth of England before the advent of mechanization in textiles.
(B)	This option is incorrect. While natural resources like coal and iron ore were important to England’s industrialization, an emphasis on resource availability would be more likely to support a conventional technology-driven historical analysis of industrialization, not a revisionist view, such as the one advanced by de Vries in the passage.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Though it is true that nations late to industrialization used state sponsorship, this fact does not support de Vries’ argument about the importance of preindustrial economic growth.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Commercial elites in Europe often imitated and married into the nobility; however, this point is unrelated to de Vries’ argument.

Question 22

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-2 Identify the changes in agricultural production and evaluate their impact on economic growth and the standard of living in preindustrial Europe.		Historical Argumentation Interpretation	2.4 I A
(A)	This option is incorrect. The traditional pattern of delayed marriages and births is typically seen as a response to economic stagnancy, rather than its cause.
(B)	This option is correct. Malthus’ analysis of the dynamic between population growth and resource availability has traditionally informed historical interpretations of European economic development before the onset of industrialization. De Vries is arguing for a more nuanced view, in which preindustrial changes in labor patterns, rather than industrialization itself, are seen as the primary cause of sustained economic growth.
(C)	This option is incorrect. An emphasis on the importance of overseas trade would likely not support the conventional view of the development of European economies before industrialization, as European overseas trade expanded significantly in the early modern period and is generally viewed as a stimulus to economic growth.
(D)	This option is incorrect. The assertion is debatable — since war more often harmed than aided economies — and if true, it would hold for any period, not simply the early modern economy, where mobilization was much more limited than in the modern era.

Question 23

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
PP-1 Explain how and why wealth generated from new trading, financial, and manufacturing practices and institutions created a market and then a consumer economy. PP-2 Identify the changes in agricultural production and evaluate their impact on economic growth and the standard of living in preindustrial Europe.		Interpretation	2.2 I A 2.2 I C
(A)	This option is incorrect. The decline of guilds supports de Vries's interpretation in that it shows that changing labor practices played a more central role in encouraging growth than new technology.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Since cottage manufacturing is a preindustrial innovation, its expansion supports de Vries' claims, as it underscores the possibility of generating economic growth without the necessity of technological innovation.
(C)	This option is incorrect. The commercial revolution predates industrialization, and its stimulation of demand for manufactured goods supports de Vries' argument that growth occurred in the preindustrial economy without new technologies.
(D)	This option is correct. State encouragement of inventions would support the traditional view (contrary to de Vries' argument) that technological innovations were central to economic growth during the industrial era.

Question 24

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
OS-7 Analyze how and to what extent the Enlightenment encouraged Europeans to understand human behavior, economic activity, and politics as governed by natural laws.		Contextualization	2.3 I A
(A)	This option is correct. As evidenced in the discussion of the immensity of space, Voltaire shared many philosophes' belief in the empiricism and rationalism of the Scientific Revolution and thought scientific discoveries warranted a re-examination of existing practices and institutions (e.g., organized religion).
(B)	This option is incorrect. Most philosophes were not professional scientists but rather popularizers of new scientific discoveries who sought to develop a “science of society” (social science).
(C)	This option is incorrect. It is true that the Enlightenment was spread in new venues such as coffeehouses, but the passage does not reference this fact.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Though some philosophes embraced atheism (e.g., Diderot), most looked more toward the type of natural religion that Voltaire implicitly endorses in the passage — acknowledgement of a Creator but without dogmas, a priesthood, or miracles.

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
OS-6 Explain how European exploration and colonization was facilitated by the development of the scientific method and led to a re-examination of cultural norms.		Causation Contextualization	2.3 II C
(A)	This option is incorrect. Protestant theology did not generally embrace religious toleration and was also strongly rooted in Scripture, which Voltaire mocks in his treatise.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Enlightenment political thought did support individual rights and social contract theories of government, but Voltaire's passage does not use these terms to support his view. His is a cultural, not political, analysis.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Voltaire supported a Newtonian conception of nature (as suggested in the first paragraph); however, the main object of his scorn in the second paragraph is the assumption of religious certainty amidst the obvious diversity of religious outlooks.
(D)	This option is correct. As Europeans encountered more cultures through global trade and wrote about these experiences (travel literature), these developments supported a growing cultural relativism and caused many thinkers to question notions of European uniqueness or superiority.

Question 26

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
SP-3 Trace the changing relationship between states and ecclesiastical authority and the emergence of the principle of religious toleration.		Causation Contextualization	1.3 III D 2.3 IV A
(A)	This option is incorrect. Opposition to royal absolutism took many forms, including noble use of the Parlements , but the calling of the Estates General did not become a major political issue until just before the onset of the French Revolution.
(B)	This option is correct. Louis XIV's revocation of the Edict of Nantes spurred French and international opposition to his regime, resulted in renewed persecution and emigration of French Huguenots, and sustained the increasing belief that religion should be a private matter, not subject to state control.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Though clerics did criticize the materialist perspective of the Encyclopédie , their criticism was generally not shared by French supporters of the Enlightenment.
(D)	This option is incorrect. France's Jewish population was deprived of rights, but its relative size was small, and the condition of Jews in France was not a major concern of the philosophes , some of whom were anti-Semitic.

Question 27

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
OS-7 Analyze how and to what extent the Enlightenment encouraged Europeans to understand human behavior, economic activity, and politics as governed by natural laws.		Comparison Synthesis	1.3 I B 2.3 IV A
(A)	This option is incorrect. Both Luther and Voltaire used the corruption of the Catholic clergy to call into question its legitimacy; however, Voltaire was more concerned in the passage with the contradiction between church teachings and scientific and geographical discoveries.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Luther was more concerned with disputing individual points of Catholic doctrine, such as salvation and the Lord's Supper, whereas Voltaire sought primarily to undermine the general legitimacy of organized religion.
(C)	This option is correct. Since Voltaire called all scriptural claims into question, he would not base his critique of the Catholic Church on appeals to religious authority. Voltaire's critique stands on the principles of empiricism and reason.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Throughout his career, Voltaire aimed his sharpest criticisms against religious dogmatism and particularly the Catholic Church; thus, his famous statement against the church — “crush the infamous thing!”

Question 28

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
INT-7 Analyze how contact with non-European peoples increased European social and cultural diversity and affected attitudes toward race.		Comparison Synthesis	2.3 I A 3.6 II B
(A)	This option is incorrect. Neither Social Darwinists nor Voltaire were skeptical of the ability of science to explain the natural world.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Though Enlightenment philosophes commented on race and slavery, Social Darwinists placed greater importance on biological explanations of differences among people, leading to a strong emphasis on race in their intellectual framework.
(C)	This option is correct. Social Darwinists developed their ideas during the age of European industry and imperialism (19th century) and tended to use race and the cultural accomplishments of Europe to justify European domination of the globe.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Both Voltaire (as evidenced by the second paragraph in the passage) and the Social Darwinists shared a belief in the basic animal nature of human beings. Like most Enlightenment philosophes , Voltaire thought of humans as essentially rational beings; Social Darwinists, by contrast, saw some humans as driven by uncontrollable biological processes.

Learning Objectives	Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
PP-4 Explain how the development of new technologies and industries, as well as new means of communication, marketing, and transportation, contributed to expansion of consumerism and increased standards of living and quality of life in the 19th and 20th centuries. PP-6 Analyze how expanding commerce and industrialization from the 16th through the 19th centuries led to the growth of cities and changes in the social structure, most notably a shift from a landed to a commercial elite. SP-16 Explain how the French Revolution and the revolutionary and Napoleonic wars shifted the European balance of power and encouraged the creation of a new diplomatic framework.	Contextualization	3.4 I A 3.4 I B
(A)	This option is incorrect. States did not implement social welfare policies until the late 19th and early 20th centuries.
(B)	This option is incorrect. As industrialization began in Germany, many skilled workers lost their positions due to mechanization. Further, the illustration depicts a middle-class family.
(C)	This option is incorrect. In 1848–1849 the deputies in the Frankfurt Parliament failed to create a constitution for a united Germany.
(D)	This option is correct. The quarter-century of revolutionary and Napoleonic wars in central Europe set back economic development; the return of stability after the Congress of Vienna provided the opportunity for renewed growth.

Question 30

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
IS-6 Evaluate the causes and consequences of persistent tensions between women's role and status in the private versus the public sphere. IS-9 Assess the extent to which women participated in and benefited from the shifting values of European society from the 15th century onward.		Historical Argumentation	3.2 III A 3.4 I B 3.4 I C 3.4 I F
(A)	This option is incorrect. Though companionate marriage patterns were developing in the 19th century, the primary decision-making role in families remained male-dominated.
(B)	This option is incorrect. The cartoon satirizes the notion that the proper place of men is a domestic one, suggesting that this role reversal leads to social chaos.
(C)	This option is correct. The cartoon demonstrates male anxieties over the prospect of women becoming more engaged in political life by its portrayal of a clueless and domesticated husband taking on the traditionally female responsibility of childcare, while the wife presumably takes up with the suave character lurking behind the door.
(D)	This option is incorrect. The revolutions of 1848 focused primarily on liberal and national political change. Women participated, often on behalf of their class, but did not organize specifically for the sexual freedom warned against in the cartoon.

Question 31

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
IS-6 Evaluate the causes and consequences of persistent tensions between women's role and status in the private versus the public sphere. IS-9 Assess the extent to which women participated in and benefited from the shifting values of European society from the 15th century onward.		Continuity and Change	3.2 III B 3.2 III C
(A)	This option is incorrect. Socialist notions of family and child rearing did not take strong hold in Europe, despite being briefly embraced by leaders of the Russian Revolution.
(B)	This option is correct. As working-class families gained higher wages and had access to more leisure opportunities due to government reforms, they began to adopt similar child-rearing patterns and a more gendered division of labor.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Women's entrance into the paid workforce in large numbers would not occur until World War I.
(D)	This option is incorrect. The two images reflect a continuity of belief that a woman's proper role was in the domestic sphere — an attitude generally supported by nationalists.

Question 32

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-3 Explain how geographic, economic, social, and political factors affected the pace, nature, and timing of industrialization in western and eastern Europe.		Causation	3.2 V
(A)	This option is incorrect. Because the system was based on cheap labor, serfdom provided no incentive for the adoption of labor-saving machinery.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Since a large portion of Russia's population was made up of serfs who were legally bound to the land, rates of emigration from Russia remained relatively low as long as serfdom persisted.
(C)	This option is incorrect. While some Russian intellectuals in the late 19th century embraced utopian socialism, their views were not widely shared among Russian peasants.
(D)	This option is correct. Russia was the last major state to abolish serfdom, a system that hindered the development of a commercial agricultural system or of industry. This system largely accounts for Russia's slow pace of economic development compared to western Europe until the end of the 19th century.

Question 33

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-3 Explain how geographic, economic, social, and political factors affected the pace, nature, and timing of industrialization in western and eastern Europe.		Analyzing Evidence	3.2 I B
(A)	This option is incorrect. Russia at the time of the speech boasted very little industry — the driver for creating a more developed class system.
(B)	This option is correct. As references to serfdom and autocracy in the speech demonstrate, Russia remained dominated by traditional elites with limited opportunities for social mobility.
(C)	This option is incorrect. While undoubtedly conservative, the ideology expounded in the passage does not represent a new ideology; rather it represents a long-standing paternalistic view of authority in a stratified society.
(D)	This option is incorrect. The estate owner's speech does not embrace any socialist conception of state planning; rather, it expresses an ideal of local control while still acknowledging the tsar's political supremacy.

Question 34

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
SP-4 Analyze how new political and economic theories from the 17th century and the Enlightenment challenged absolutism and shaped the development of constitutional states, parliamentary governments, and the concept of individual rights.		Contextualization	3.4 II D
(A)	This option is incorrect. There is nothing in the speech that specifically references Orthodox traditions, and Orthodox theology in 19th-century Russia generally did not challenge the established social and political order.
(B)	This option is correct. By the mid-19th century many reformers in Russia recognized the degree to which serfdom contributed to its backwardness, possibly inspiring the estate owner's insistence that his "property" cannot be touched by an outside power.
(C)	This option is incorrect. The Crimean War did not start until 1853, six years after the date of the speech.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Though many in the west recognized Russia's backwardness due to serfdom, western abolitionist groups focused their efforts on African slavery, not on Russian serfdom.

Question 35

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-15 Analyze efforts of government and nongovernmental reform movements to respond to poverty and other social problems in the 19th and 20th centuries.		Causation Continuity and Change	3.3 II C
(A)	This option is incorrect. Many states realized during the late 19th century the value and purpose of universal compulsory schooling in an age of industrialization and nationalism as a way to train students for a complex economy and citizenship. The growth in the number of schools, especially the dramatic growth of public coeducational schools and schools for girls, suggests that offering educational opportunities to children who previously did not receive any education was one of the goals of the legislators.
(B)	This option is incorrect. The data clearly indicate the lack of opportunities for girls in 1877 and the significant increase in girls and coeducational schools up to 1890, suggesting the need for schools for girls.
(C)	This option is correct. Since the data demonstrate the expansion in the number of schools, it could not have been the primary concern to consolidate students into larger schools.
(D)	This option is incorrect. France was a republic and many republicans feared the continued conservative influence of the Catholic Church, which is why the number of public schools increased from 1877 to 1890, whereas the number of religious schools declined.

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-15 Analyze efforts of government and nongovernmental reform movements to respond to poverty and other social problems in the 19th and 20th centuries. SP-17 Explain the role of nationalism in altering the European balance of power, and explain attempts made to limit nationalism as a means to ensure continental stability.		Causation Contextualization	3.3 II C
(A)	This option is correct. Given the expansion of schools in Source 1 and the nationalist sentiments expressed in Source 2, it is clear that governments recognized the ability of mobilizing loyalty to the state and its institutions through schooling.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Though most states in this era feared revolutionary ideologies, the sources don't address this problem. Further, socialist movements continued to expand despite the adoption of compulsory schooling.
(C)	This option is incorrect. European states adopted military conscription and mobilized a large percentage of men for war, but there is no indication in the sources that schools were used to differentiate students' suitability for war.
(D)	This option is incorrect. While Source 2 refers to students' parents and patrimony, the use of the mother as a metaphor for the state indicates that the primary intent of expanded schooling was to promote loyalty to the state.

Question 37

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
SP-17 Explain the role of nationalism in altering the European balance of power, and explain attempts made to limit nationalism as a means to ensure continental stability.		Contextualization	3.4 III B 3.4 III C
(A)	This option is incorrect. Napoleon had been defeated in 1815, far removed from the concerns of French foreign policy in 1883.
(B)	This option is incorrect. France supported the unification of Italy through the policies of Napoleon III, and its unification did not in general threaten France's position in Europe.
(C)	This option is correct. Germany was unified in 1871 after defeating France in war and annexing Alsace-Lorraine. The mention in Source 2 of the suffering mother whose wounds have not healed is a reference to this defeat. Determination to retake its lost territories motivated France's foreign policy into the 20th century.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Though France and Britain competed for colonies in Africa, there was no specific instance of French imperial defeat that is referenced in the source.

Question 38

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
SP-18 Evaluate how overseas competition and changes in the alliance system upset the Concert of Europe and set the stage for World War I.		Causation	3.5 I A 3.5 III A
(A)	This option is incorrect. Britain and Germany did not clash directly in the Balkans, and though Britain was concerned over the status of the Ottoman Empire, it did not directly engage Germany there.
(B)	This option is correct. Germany's decision in the 1890s to build a world-class battleship fleet to rival Britain's navy threatened Britain's traditional naval supremacy and thus its ability to protect its colonial empire, the lifeline to its economy.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Germany had already been unified for decades when the cartoon appeared, and Britain did not interfere in Bismarck's wars of unification.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Both Germany and Britain experienced some agitation by workers, but this was not a cause of the military buildup referenced in the cartoon.

Question 39

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
SP-18 Evaluate how overseas competition and changes in the alliance system upset the Concert of Europe and set the stage for World War I.		Causation	3.4 III C 3.4 III D
(A)	This option is correct. A primary goal of Germany's foreign policy under Bismarck was to isolate France diplomatically. This policy became untenable under Kaiser Wilhelm II, whose naval buildup and foreign provocations drove France and Russia and then France and Britain together.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Some voices prior to World War I called for disarmament, but these were largely ignored as nations continued to militarize and plan for a looming armed conflict.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Influential groups in both nations benefitted from high military spending and while some groups, like the SPD in Germany, objected, their opposition was easily dismissed in an age of rising nationalism.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Most other states realized the folly of attempting to surpass British naval spending and no other state attempted to match the size of the British navy.

Question 40

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
SP-18 Evaluate how overseas competition and changes in the alliance system upset the Concert of Europe and set the stage for World War I.		Analyzing Evidence	3.4 III D
(A)	This option is incorrect. There is no suggestion in the cartoon that the two “poker players” should cooperate; rather, the cartoon makes the point that the British can win the arms race with a determined attitude.
(B)	This option is incorrect. The cartoon does not portray naval officers but symbolic representations of each nation. Thus, there is no explicit or implied critique of military traditions or officials.
(C)	This option is correct. In the cartoon, John Bull (Britain) is portrayed as responding to the gamble of Kaiser Wilhelm, with determination to win the naval arms race. Also, the cartoon is from a British publication and thus sees the issues primarily through the perspective of British strategic interests.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Though it is true that aristocrats dominated the officer corps of both nations, the cartoon does not address that issue.

Question 41

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
SP-9 Analyze how various movements for political and social equality — such as feminism, anticolonialism, and campaigns for immigrants’ rights — pressured governments and redefined citizenship. IS-6 Evaluate the causes and consequences of persistent tensions between women’s role and status in the private versus the public sphere.		Contextualization	3.3 III C
(A)	This option is incorrect. Birth rates did gradually decline after 1870, but concerns over slowing population growth typically led to efforts to strengthen and celebrate women’s role as mothers.
(B)	This option is incorrect. If anything, the Catholic Church’s influence at the beginning of the 20th century was decreasing, with larger urban populations, consumerism, and the influence of secular notions of separation of church and state.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Though some women were involved in radical political movements, this was not a major concern of the era, especially given that Futurism expressed its own predilection for anarchism through creative destruction.
(D)	This option is correct. During the late 19th and early 20th centuries, women began to gain economic and political rights and argue that they could play a more public role. Marinetti’s manifesto is in part a reaction to that trend.

Question 42

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
OS-8 Explain the emergence, spread, and questioning of scientific, technological, and positivist approaches to addressing social problems. OS-10 Analyze the means by which individualism, subjectivity, and emotion came to be considered a valid source of knowledge.		Continuity and Change	3.3 I F
(A)	This option is correct. Romantics of the 19th century emphasized emotion and authenticity and celebrated the artist's willingness to die for the sake of his art.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Positivism focused on an empirical and scientific approach toward nature and problem solving — an attitude that does not fit with the Futurists' glorification of the irrational.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Utopian socialism supported government planning to meet human needs and advance gender equality — ideas that contradict the manifesto's anarchist and male chauvinistic tone.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Some supporters of Darwin (e.g., Herbert Spencer) argued that war could play a positive role in sorting out racial hierarchies, but they tended to take a more calculating approach toward social issues than the Futurists did.

Question 43

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
OS-12 Analyze how artists used strong emotions to express individuality and political theorists encouraged emotional identification with the nation.		Contextualization	3.3 I F
(A)	This option is incorrect. Freud's ideas exercised only an indirect influence on the Futurists, as part of a larger trend questioning European values around the turn of the 20th century. The passage offers no specific references to Freudian psychological concepts.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Since the Futurists glorified Western technology, they had little regard for those non-Western cultures that, in their opinion, lagged behind the West in scientific thinking.
(C)	This option is correct. On the eve of World War I, many intellectuals attacked the foundations of Enlightenment thought, such as reason and optimism, which were still predominant in Western culture, and instead stressed the irrational and destructive nature of humans.
(D)	This option is incorrect. The influence of American popular culture did not become significant until after World War I.

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
OS-12 Analyze how artists used strong emotions to express individuality and political theorists encouraged emotional identification with the nation. SP-6 Explain how new ideas of political authority and the failure of diplomacy led to world wars, political revolutions, and the establishment of totalitarian regimes in the 20th century. SP-8 Explain how and why various groups, including communists and fascists, undermined parliamentary democracy through the establishment of regimes that maintained dictatorial control while manipulating democratic forms.		Causation	4.2 II A
(A)	This option is incorrect. The Futurist manifesto promotes nationalism and gender inequality — two principles opposed to Communist ideas, with their emphasis on worker solidarity across borders and criticism of the “bourgeois family.”
(B)	This option is correct. Like the Futurists, fascists glorified war and the irrational in politics. Fascists in Italy and Germany used new technologies — automobiles, airplanes, radio, film — as sources of artistic inspiration and to rally and manipulate public opinion.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Conservatives attempted to maintain the influence of traditional institutions, such as the aristocracy, monarchy, and church — institutions the Futurists wished to expunge in their program of social change through modernism and technology.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Social Democrats favored parliamentary politics and thus would have rejected Marinetti’s statement that war was the only path to progress.

Question 45

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-11 Analyze the social and economic causes and consequences of the Great Depression in Europe.		Causation	4.2 III B
(A)	This option is correct. A major reason for the rise of extremist groups like the Nazis was the desperate economic conditions created by the Great Depression. The poster appeals to those seeking strong government measures to address these problems.
(B)	This option is incorrect. By 1932, the hyperinflation in Germany had passed and the currency had been stabilized. While the memory of hyperinflation likely contributed to public discontent with the Weimar Republic, the poster specifically refers to the problems of unemployment caused by the Great Depression.
(C)	This option is incorrect. After the Treaty of Versailles, the Rhineland was demilitarized and occupied by allied troops, with Germany prohibited from placing troops there. However, the poster makes no reference to the conditions imposed by the treaty. Further, Allied troops had left the Rhineland by the time the Great Depression began.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Though the last governments of the Weimar Republic did cut back on welfare programs, they did not completely abandon them. Further, these welfare cuts were not a significant contributor to the economic conditions addressed by the poster.

Question 46

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-11 Analyze the social and economic causes and consequences of the Great Depression in Europe.		Contextualization	4.2 II B
(A)	This option is incorrect. Expressionism sought to express emotional states through more abstract imagery and exerted influence on German high culture, rather than on posters and other imagery destined for popular consumption. Moreover, the Nazis condemned most expressionist art as “degenerate.”
(B)	This option is incorrect. Though Nazi rhetoric was strongly anti-Communist, this poster is a commentary on the specific economic problems of Weimar Germany.
(C)	This option is correct. Democracies in the interwar period struggled to address the issues created by the Great Depression. Radical political groups on both ends of the political spectrum (communists and fascists) exploited these difficulties to win support for their extreme solutions.
(D)	This option is incorrect. The portrayal of the German family in the poster seems to be an endorsement of traditional gender roles. Very few women in interwar Europe held positions of political leadership, and the poster is not a commentary on female political power.

Question 47

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-15 Analyze efforts of government and nongovernmental reform movements to respond to poverty and other social problems in the 19th and 20th centuries.		Causation	4.2 IV B
(A)	This option is correct. To avoid the mistakes of the interwar period and prevent the rise of extremist groups, European states developed extensive social welfare systems after 1945. This is true of both the Western and Eastern blocs during the Cold War.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Voting rights actually expanded after World War II, as women in several European countries gained the right to vote for the first time.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Guest workers did arrive in Western Europe at the behest of some governments; however, this policy was intended to allay a labor shortage in the context of Western Europe's postwar "economic miracle." The poster, by contrast, portrays a situation of labor surplus, resulting in unemployment.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Though women in the postwar period did gain further representation in European parliaments, particularly in Scandinavia, this was not accomplished through mandated proportional representation.

Question 48

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-5 Analyze the origins, characteristics, and effects of the post-World War II economic miracle and the economic integration of Europe (the Euro zone).		Causation	4.1 IV D
(A)	This option is incorrect. Eastern European countries within the Soviet sphere of influence after World War II were prevented from accepting Marshall Plan aid, as it was viewed by the Soviets as a tool to spread American capitalism.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Most countries of Eastern Europe did not have a strong tradition of industrial development, especially when compared to Western Europe.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Because of the Cold War division of Europe, the nations of the Eastern bloc were not able to join the EEC (later EU) until after the collapse of communism (1989–1991).
(D)	This option is correct. The Soviet economic model was imposed on the countries of Eastern Europe, and they adopted centralized planning and rapid industrialization along the lines of Soviet Five Year Plans.

Question 49

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
PP-5 Analyze the origins, characteristics, and effects of the post–World War II economic miracle and the economic integration of Europe (the Euro zone).		Comparison Synthesis	4.2 IV A 4.2 V B
(A)	This option is incorrect. Both Western and Eastern Europe experienced population growth after 1945, but the more significant increases in the birth rates (the Baby Boom) occurred in the West.
(B)	This option is correct. Western Europe recovered strongly from postwar destruction, helped by United States aid and policies of economic and political integration. Though Eastern Europe also grew post-1945, it did not grow at the same high rates that caused contemporaries to characterize Western European growth as an “economic miracle.”
(C)	This option is incorrect. The European Union was created through the Maastricht Treaty in the early 1990s; by then, the “economic miracle” had already occurred.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Large numbers of immigrants did arrive in Western Europe after 1945, and while this trend did facilitate economic recovery, it affected the statistics in Table 2 only indirectly.

Question 50

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skills	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-5 Analyze the origins, characteristics, and effects of the post–World War II economic miracle and the economic integration of Europe (the Euro zone).		Analyzing evidence	4.2 IV A
(A)	This option is incorrect. There were also authoritarian governments in 1938 in western and central Europe, and this fact alone would not necessarily disallow comparisons of economic growth between the two regions.
(B)	This option is correct. Statistics can be manipulated for purposes of government propaganda, especially in states where government control of the media does not allow for independent verification of reported economic data. Since economic competition between the socialist and capitalist systems was a key part of Cold War rivalries, one could expect that such data to have been manipulated by the authorities.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Though it is true that East Germany did not exist as a separate nation until 1949, its economic output for 1938 can likely be determined based on regional economic data from that year; the fact that Table 1 includes such an interpolation does not by itself call into question the data from that point forward or for the more general trends of Eastern Europe.
(D)	This option is incorrect. It is true that nations during the Cold War spent significant portions of national income on defense, but such defense spending would be relevant to assessing the overall economic performance of national economies; moreover, government spending on domestic defense industries would be reflected in the tables.

Question 51

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
PP-5 Analyze the origins, characteristics, and effects of the post–World War II economic miracle and the economic integration of Europe (the Euro zone).		Historical Argumentation	4.2 V A 4.2 V B
(A)	This option is correct. Table 2 indicates that governments in Western Europe generally presided over better performing economies, which could deliver more goods and services per capita to their citizens than the nondemocratic governments of communist Eastern Europe. The exceptions to this rule are Greece, Portugal, and Spain — countries in the Western bloc, none of which was truly democratic in 1965.
(B)	This option is incorrect. As the data show, those nations in Eastern Europe with central planning did grow economically, just not as strongly as Western European nations.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Since countries from both blocs provided fairly extensive social welfare benefits and economic growth did occur on both sides of the Iron Curtain, the costs of the welfare state did not negatively affect the economy.
(D)	This option is incorrect. In Table 2, all the nations in Eastern Europe were part of the Warsaw Pact and only Sweden and Switzerland in Western Europe had not joined NATO. The data provided in the charts does not allow us to draw a conclusion concerning the impact of membership in these organizations on economic growth.

Question 52

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-12 Evaluate how the expansion of a global consumer economy after World War II served as a catalyst to opposition movements in Eastern and Western Europe.		Contextualization	4.4 III A
(A)	This option is incorrect. By the late 1970s, conservative parties (e.g., Thatcher's in Britain) had begun to question the size and reach of the welfare state, so its success was not unquestioned. Also, Green Parties across Europe generally supported the welfare state and would not have reacted negatively to its "success."
(B)	This option is incorrect. Greens did not usually oppose economic integration, especially since they believed that European-wide coordination of policies might allow for stronger environmental regulation.
(C)	This option is incorrect. Equality for women was a central feature of the Green Party's platform, as seen in the manifesto, and thus an expansion of women's rights would not have elicited a "reaction."
(D)	This option is correct. Green parties responded to growing consumerism and its environmental impact by arguing that consumerism by itself does not lead to a better and more just society. The manifesto indicates the Greens' suspicion of rampant capitalism.

Question 53

Learning Objective		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
INT-7 Analyze how contact with non-European peoples increased European social and cultural diversity and affected attitudes toward race.		Contextualization	4.4 III D
(A)	This option is incorrect. The references to minorities and multiculturalism in the platform have to do with minority and migrant groups in Finland, only a fraction of whom arrived in the country as a result of the fall of communism in Eastern Europe.
(B)	This option is correct. Many of the guest workers invited to Europe in the 1950s and 1960s had settled permanently but had been denied equal political rights in many nations. The Greens aimed to redress that inequality.
(C)	This option is incorrect. The Greens would likely have reacted negatively to American pop culture because of its promotion of consumerism, but the references in the platform to minorities and multiculturalism are not directly related to that.
(D)	This option is incorrect. By 2008 (year of the manifesto), the Baby Boom was a distant memory, as European populations had already begun to stagnate or shrink.

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concept in the Curriculum Framework
PP-5 Analyze the origins, characteristics, and effects of the post–World War II economic miracle and the economic integration of Europe (the Euro zone). PP-15 Analyze efforts of government and nongovernmental reform movements to respond to poverty and other social problems in the 19th and 20th centuries. SP-5 Assess the role of colonization, the Industrial Revolution, total warfare, and economic depressions in altering the government’s relationship to the economy, both in overseeing economic activity and in addressing its social impact.		Contextualization	4.2 IV B
(A)	This option is incorrect. Green Parties were typically not strongly nationalistic, and the Green’s goals of expanding access to education and public services typically ran counter to the policies advocated by nationalist parties, who sought to limit access to such programs for immigrants and minorities.
(B)	This option is incorrect. By 2008, most European nations were either members of or had petitioned to join the EU (Finland joined in 1995). The Green political movement transcended national boundaries, looking for European-wide solutions to environmental and social problems.
(C)	This option is incorrect. The Greens were a secular party having little to do with the Catholic Church; moreover, the Church’s liberalization and ecumenism after 1962 would likely have been applauded by Greens as a step in the right direction.
(D)	This option is correct. As the welfare state came under increasing scrutiny — especially with Europe’s aging population — free-market critics called for its curtailment. For the Greens, the issue was one of equality and quality of life, leading to their support for maintaining and expanding welfare benefits.

Learning Objectives		Historical Thinking Skill	Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework
SP-9 Analyze how various movements for political and social equality — such as feminism, anticolonialism, and campaigns for immigrants’ rights — pressured governments and redefined citizenship. IS-7 Evaluate how identities such as ethnicity, race, and class have defined the individual in relationship to society.		Contextualization	4.4 III A 4.4 III B
(A)	This option is incorrect. Considering the manifesto’s endorsement of immigrant and minority rights, it would be contradictory for the Green’s to support restrictions on immigration.
(B)	This option is incorrect. Free trade in the postwar era has led to globalization of culture and consumerism, effects that the Greens decried and combated. Many Greens have protested meetings of the World Trade Organization, which promotes free flow of capital and goods.
(C)	This option is correct. Since the Greens supported equality and rights for minorities, it can be inferred that they also supported civil rights for gays and lesbians.
(D)	This option is incorrect. Most Greens, as can be seen from their condemnation of nuclear power, supported the anti-nuclear movement and, correspondingly, advocated for a pacifist foreign policy.

Curriculum Framework Alignment for Short-Answer Question 1

Learning Objectives	OS-5 Analyze how the development of Renaissance humanism, the printing press, and the scientific method contributed to the emergence of a new theory of knowledge and conception of the universe. SP-1 Explain the emergence of civic humanism and new conceptions of political authority during the Renaissance, as well as subsequent theories and practices that stressed the political importance and rights of the individual. IS-1 Explain the characteristics, practices, and beliefs of traditional communities in preindustrial Europe and how they were challenged by religious reform.
Historical Thinking Skill	Continuity and Change
Key Concepts in the Curriculum Framework	1.1 III B 1.5 V A

Scoring Guidelines for Short-Answer Question 1

Use the etching shown below, The Fair on St. George's Day (circa 1560) by Flemish artist Pieter Bruegel the Elder, to answer all parts of the question that follows.

The Fair on St. George's Day, c.1559-60 (etching and engraving, 1st state), Bruegel, Pieter the Elder (c.1525-69) (after) / Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, Texas, USA / Gift of Miss Annette Finnigan / The Bridgeman Art Library

- a) Briefly analyze how the subject of the etching reflects artistic trends in sixteenth-century Europe.
- b) Based on the painting and your knowledge of European history, briefly analyze TWO features of European leisure activities in the period from the mid-fifteenth to the mid-seventeenth century.

Scoring Guide

0–3 points

- ONE point for connecting the subject matter/style of the etching accurately to an artistic trend of the sixteenth century.
- ONE point for connecting the leisure activities in the etching or from content knowledge to a specific feature of European leisure in the early modern period.
- ONE point for connecting the leisure activities in the etching or from content knowledge to a DIFFERENT specific feature (from above) of European leisure in the early modern period.

Scoring Notes

Examples of responses to Part A that would earn credit:

Sixteenth-century artists paid increasing attention to scenes of everyday life.

Sixteenth-century artists paid increasing attention to non-religious themes or activities.

Sixteenth-century art featured more frequent portrayals of non-elite members of society (e.g., merchants, peasants) in a naturalistic and sympathetic manner.

Sixteenth-century art featured the use of perspective to create a more realistic portrayal of three-dimensional space.

Examples of responses to Part B that would earn credit:

Leisure activities of the early modern period tended to be communal rather than individual.

Leisure activities of the early modern period tended to be participatory rather than spectator oriented.

Leisure activities of the early modern period, such as festivals, were often tied to the yearly agricultural cycle.

Leisure activities of the early modern period, such as festivals, were often tied to the Roman Catholic religious calendar and often had a religious aspect.

Leisure activities of the early modern period often involved mixing of social orders and classes.

Curriculum Framework Alignment for Short-Answer Question 2

Learning Objectives	OS-1 Account for the persistence of traditional and folk understandings of the cosmos and causation, even with the advent of the Scientific Revolution. OS-4 Explain how a worldview based on science and reason challenged and preserved social order and roles, especially the roles of women. OS-7 Analyze how and to what extent the Enlightenment encouraged Europeans to understand human behavior, economic activity, and politics as governed by natural laws.

Scoring Guidelines for Short-Answer Question 2

Answer all parts of the question that follows.

Historians have sometimes referred to the period from the mid-seventeenth century to the late eighteenth century as the Age of Reason.

- Provide TWO specific pieces of evidence that support this characterization of the period and explain how they support it.
- Provide ONE specific piece of evidence that undermines this characterization of the period and explain how it undermines it.

Scoring Guide

0–3 points

- ONE point for explaining a piece of evidence or development within the specified period that supports the characterization.
- ONE point for explaining a DIFFERENT (from above) piece of evidence or development within the specified period that supports the characterization.
- ONE point for explaining a piece of evidence or development within the specified period that undermines the characterization.

Scoring Notes

Examples of responses to Part A that would earn credit:

Various advances in scientific knowledge (e.g., heliocentric theory, advances in anatomy and physiology, codification of mechanics) could be used to support the characterization of the period as the “Age of Reason.”

The characterization can be supported by the growth in the use of empirical methods based on observation and reasoning, rather than adherence to authority.

The characterization can be supported by the frequent challenges to religious and classical texts as sources of knowledge about the physical world.

The characterization can be supported by the attempts of scientists and philosophers of the period to discern predictable patterns in nature and derive scientific laws and principles from them.

The characterization can be supported by the application by scientists of mathematical models to scientific descriptions.

The characterization can be supported by the development of a mechanistic worldview in the period.

The characterization can be supported by the application by scientists and theoreticians of insights from the natural sciences to the social sciences.

The characterization can be supported by the encouragement of scientific research by governments and learned societies.

Examples of responses to Part B that would earn credit:

The characterization of the period as the “Age of Reason” can be undermined by the continued belief in supernatural intervention in everyday life (e.g., witchcraft).

The characterization can be undermined by the persistence of folk beliefs and prescientific cosmologies.

The characterization can be undermined by the fact that a relatively small, unrepresentative section of the population was strongly affected by the Scientific Revolution and Enlightenment; the Age of Reason was mostly an elite phenomenon.

The characterization can be undermined by the persistence of an interest in magic, astrology, and the occult, even among members of the elite (e.g., Newton’s interest in alchemy).

The characterization can be undermined by the excesses committed in the name of reason and enlightenment (e.g., the Reign of Terror).

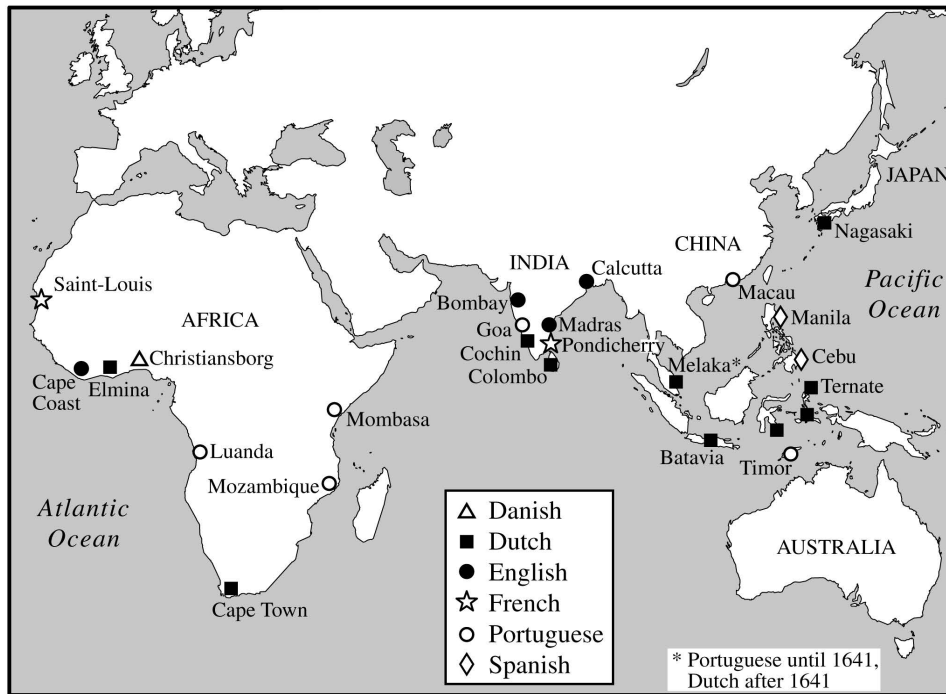

Curriculum Framework Alignment for Short-Answer Question 3

Learning Objectives	INT-1 Assess the relative influence of economic, religious, and political motives in promoting exploration and colonization. INT-5 Evaluate the impact of the Columbian Exchange — the global exchange of goods, plants, animals, and microbes — on Europe’s economy, society, and culture. INT-6 Assess the role of overseas trade, labor, and technology in making Europe part of a global economic network and encouraging the development of new economic theories and state policies. PP-1 Explain how and why wealth generated from new trading, financial, and manufacturing practices and institutions created a market and then a consumer economy. PP-2 Identify the changes in agricultural production and evaluate their impact on economic growth and the standard of living in preindustrial Europe.

EUROPEAN TRADING POSTS IN AFRICA AND ASIA, ABOUT 1700

- Briefly explain TWO effects on European economies during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries of the trade networks shown on the map.
- Briefly explain ONE effect on European politics during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries of the trade networks shown on the map.

Scoring Guide

0–3 points

- ONE point for connecting the trade expansion indicated by the map to a broader economic development/effect in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.
- ONE point for connecting the trade expansion indicated by the map to a DIFFERENT (from above) broader economic development/effect in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.
- ONE point for connecting the trade expansion indicated by the map to a political development in the seventeenth and eighteenth century with some specificity.

Scoring Notes

Examples of responses to Part A that would earn credit:

The trade networks shown on the map contributed to general European economic growth and increase in wealth in the period.

The trade connections with Africa and Asia formed part of world-wide, long-distance trade network increasingly dominated by Europeans in the period.

The trade networks led to the creation of new commercial and financial institutions (e.g., joint stock companies, limited liability corporations, quasi-government trade companies).

European participation in the trade networks both fostered and was fostered by the development of mercantilist doctrines regarding trade and economic policy.

As a result of the trade networks shown on the map, the Atlantic economies of Europe began to surpass Mediterranean economies.

The establishment of an extensive Dutch trading network boosted the growth of the Dutch economy and led to the Dutch “golden age.”

European participation in the trade networks led to broader availability of various luxury consumer goods in Europe (e.g., spices, tea, coffee, silk, porcelain, gems).

European participation in the trade networks led to the beginnings of a consumer society.

European participation in the trade networks shown was linked to their domination of the transatlantic slave trade.

Examples of responses to Part B that would earn credit:

The trade networks shown on the map increased military power and influence of the Atlantic seaboard countries relative to other European countries.

Competition for lucrative trading posts contributed to increased rivalries and tensions among European powers seeking overseas trade outposts (e.g., Seven Years’ War).

The creation of trading posts led to an increased involvement in the internal affairs of areas outside Europe (particularly South Asia towards the end of the 1700s).

Scoring Guidelines for Short-Answer Question 4

Source 1

“The First World War was a tragic and unnecessary conflict. Unnecessary because the train of events that led to its outbreak might have been broken at any point during the five weeks of crisis that preceded the first clash of arms, had prudence or common goodwill found a voice; tragic because the [war] ended the lives of ten million human beings, tortured the emotional lives of millions more, destroyed the benevolent and optimistic culture of the European continent and left . . . a legacy of political rancor and racial hatred. . . . The Second World War . . . was the direct outcome of the First.”

“The First World War solved some problems and created others; in doing so it was little different from any other war. . . . [Since the late 1920s] one interpretation of the war [as unnecessary and tragic] has increasingly dominated over all others. This has created a barrier between our understanding of the war and that of those who fought in it. . . . Many of the ideologies which had given the war meaning became loaded with later connotations. . . . But there is no inevitability linking the Treaty of Versailles . . . to the outbreak of the Second World War. The First World War broke empires, triggered the Russian Revolution, forced a reluctant United States on to the world stage, and revived liberalism. . . . It was emphatically not a war without meaning or purpose.”

Hew Strachan, The First World War, 2003

- a) Explain ONE major difference between Keegan's and Strachan's interpretations of the role of the First World War in European history.
- b) Provide ONE piece of evidence from the period between the First and the Second World Wars that supports Keegan's interpretation (Source 1) and explain HOW it supports the interpretation.
- c) Provide ONE piece of evidence from the period between the First and the Second World Wars that supports Strachan's interpretation (Source 2) and explain HOW it supports the interpretation.

Scoring Guide

0–3 points

- ONE point for accurately explaining (beyond quoting) a major difference between the interpretations of Keegan and Strachan.
- ONE point for explaining how a piece of evidence (not directly from the quote) from the interwar period supports Keegan's interpretation (not causes of WWI).
- ONE point for explaining how a piece of evidence (not directly from the quote) from the interwar period supports Strachan's interpretation (not causes of WWI).

Scoring Notes

Examples of responses to Part A that would earn credit:

Keegan describes the war as tragic and unnecessary with entirely negative effects; Strachan sees it as having meaning and purpose and some positive effects.

Keegan sees the Second World War as an inevitable outcome of the first; Strachan asserts that the results of the First World War did not guarantee the occurrence of the second.

Keegan interprets the meaning of the war entirely with respect to its aftereffects, largely from a present-day perspective; Strachan suggests that the meaning of the war for its participants was different than what developed later and that war-time perspectives on the war's meaning should be considered.

Examples of responses to Part B that would earn credit:

Keegan's argument that the war was tragic could be supported by describing some aspect of the physical, demographic, psychological, or economic damage resulting from the war.

Keegan's argument that the war was tragic could be supported by the brutality of the totalitarian regions (Nazi German, Fascist Italy, Soviet Russia) that developed partly as a result of the war.

Keegan's assertion that the war destroyed "the benevolent and optimistic culture" of Europe could be supported by a discussion of postwar trends in European art and literature (e.g., the "trench poets," war novels, absurdist art, expressionism).

Keegan's assertion of the inevitable connection between the two world wars could be supported by discussing Fascist and Nazi exploitation of the disaffection created by the First World War.

Examples of responses to Part C that would earn credit:

Strachan's assertion about the effect of the war on the United States' role in world affairs could be supported by a discussion of the general Wilsonian program or specific aspects of United States foreign policy, such as the Fourteen Points, the Dawes Plan, or the Washington Naval Conference.

Strachan's assertion that the First World War "revivified liberalism" could be supported by a discussion of postwar attempts to create an international liberal order based on national self-determination and economic liberty (e.g., the creation of ethnically based states in Eastern Europe, the League of Nations, disarmament talks, lowering of trade barriers, loan guarantees).

Strachan's assertion concerning the importance of the fact that the war "broke empires" could be supported by discussions of the positive and negative effects of the collapse of the Russian, Ottoman, Austro-Hungarian and German Empires (e.g., the war effectively ended monarchy and empire as viable forms of government in Europe).

Free-Response Section

Section II is the free-response part of the exam. This section contains two types of free-response questions — a document-based question and a long essay question — and students have a total of 1 hour and 30 minutes to complete them both.

The document-based question emphasizes the ability to analyze and synthesize historical evidence, including textual, quantitative, or visual materials. The question also requires students to formulate a thesis and support it with relevant evidence. The five to seven documents accompanying the document-based question are not confined to a single format, may vary in length, and are chosen to illustrate interactions and complexities within the material. The diversity of materials — which could include charts, graphs, cartoons, and works of art alongside written documents — will allow students to assess the value of different kinds of documents and to call upon a broad spectrum of historical skills. Each document-based question will focus on one targeted skill — such as causation, continuity and change over time, or comparison — that varies from year to year. The document-based question will typically require students to relate the documents to a historical period or theme and, thus, to focus on major periods and issues. For this reason, this document-based question will also assess students' ability to incorporate outside knowledge related to the question but beyond the specifics of the documents. This ability to place the documents in the historical context in which they were produced is essential for student success.

To provide opportunities for students to demonstrate what they know best, students will be given a choice between two comparable long essay options. The long essay questions will measure the use of historical thinking skills to explain and analyze significant issues in European history as defined by the thematic learning objectives. Student essays will require the development of a thesis or argument supported by analysis and synthesis of specific, relevant historical evidence. Students will be expected to illustrate in their responses that they have mastered a targeted skill such as continuity and change over time, comparison, causation, or periodization. Both long essay questions on the exam will target the same skill, which varies from year to year, and the tasks required of the students will be very similar. The questions will address different chronological periods and topics. Questions will be limited to topics or examples specifically mentioned in the concept outline but framed to allow student answers to include in-depth examples, drawn either from the concept outline or from topics beyond the concept outline discussed in the classroom.

Scoring Guidelines and Notes for Document-Based Question 1

Analyze how European views of non-European peoples and cultures reflected the intellectual changes of the period from the 1760s to the 1910s.

Curriculum Framework Alignment

Learning Objectives	INT-2 Analyze the cultural beliefs that justified European conquest of overseas territories and how they changed over time. INT-7 Analyze how contact with non-European peoples increased European social and cultural diversity and affected attitudes toward race. OS-4 Explain how a worldview based on science and reason challenged and preserved social order and roles, especially the roles of women. OS-7 Analyze how and to what extent the Enlightenment encouraged Europeans to understand human behavior, economic activity, and politics as governed by natural laws. OS-10 Analyze the means by which individualism, subjectivity, and emotion came to be considered a valid source of knowledge. PP-14 Explain how industrialization elicited critiques from artists, socialists, workers' movements, and feminist organizations.

Scoring Guidelines

Maximum Possible Points: 7

Please note:

- Each point of the rubric is earned independently, e.g., a student could earn the point for argument development without earning the point for thesis.

- Unique evidence from the student response is required to earn each point, e.g., evidence in the student response that qualifies for the contextualization point, could not be used to earn the point for synthesis or the point for sourcing the documents.

A. THESIS and ARGUMENT DEVELOPMENT (2 POINTS)

Targeted Skill: Argumentation (E1, E4, AND C1)

- 1 point Presents a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim and responds to all parts of the question. The thesis must consist of one or more sentences located in one place, either in the introduction or the conclusion.

Scoring Note:

- Neither the introduction nor the conclusion is necessarily limited to a single paragraph.

- 1 point Develops and supports a cohesive argument that recognizes and accounts for historical complexity by explicitly illustrating relationships among historical evidence such as contradiction, corroboration, and/or qualification.
- 0 points Neither presents a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim and responds to all parts of the question nor develops and supports a cohesive argument that recognizes and accounts for historical complexity.

B. DOCUMENT ANALYSIS (2 POINTS)

Targeted Skill: Analyzing Evidence: Content and Sourcing (A1 and A2) and Argumentation (E2)

- 1 point Utilizes the content of at least six of the documents to support the stated thesis or a relevant argument.
- 1 point Explains the significance of the author's point of view, author's purpose, historical context, and/or audience for at least four documents.
- 0 points Neither utilizes the content of at least six of the documents to support the stated thesis or a relevant argument nor explains the significance of the author's point of view, author's purpose, historical context, and/or audience for at least four documents.

C. USING EVIDENCE BEYOND THE DOCUMENTS (2 POINTS)

Targeted Skill: Contextualization (C3) and Argumentation (E3)

CONTEXTUALIZATION

- 1 point Situates the argument by explaining the broader historical events, developments, or processes immediately relevant to the question.

Scoring Note:

- Contextualization requires using knowledge not found in the documents to situate the argument within broader historical events, developments, or processes immediately relevant to the question. The contextualization point is not awarded for merely a phrase or reference, but instead requires an explanation, typically consisting of multiple sentences or a full paragraph.

EVIDENCE BEYOND THE DOCUMENTS

- 1 point Provides an example or additional piece of specific evidence beyond those found in the documents to support or qualify the argument.

Scoring Notes:

- This example must be different from the evidence used to earn other points on this rubric.
- This point is not awarded for merely a phrase or reference. Responses need to reference an additional piece of specific evidence and explain how that evidence supports or qualifies the argument.

D. SYNTHESIS (1 POINT)

Targeted Skill: Synthesis (C4, C5, or C6)

- 1 point Extends the argument by explaining the connections between the argument and one of the following.
- a) A development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area.
 - b) A course theme and/or approach to history that is not the focus of the essay (such as political, economic, social, cultural, or intellectual history).
 - c) A different discipline or field of inquiry (such as economics, government and politics, art history, or anthropology) (Note: For World and European History only).
- 0 points Does not extend the argument by explaining the connections between the argument and the other areas listed.

Scoring Note:

- The synthesis point requires an explanation of the connections to a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area, and is not awarded for merely a phrase or reference.

On Accuracy: The components of this rubric each require that students demonstrate historically defensible content knowledge. Given the timed nature of the exam, the essay may contain errors that do not detract from the overall quality, as long as the historical content used to advance the argument is accurate.

On Clarity: These essays should be considered first drafts and thus may contain grammatical errors. Those errors will not be counted against a student unless they obscure the successful demonstration of the content knowledge and skills described above.

Scoring Notes

Note: Student samples are quoted verbatim and may contain spelling and grammatical errors.

A. Thesis and Argument Development (2 points)

a) Thesis

Responses earn one point by presenting a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim that responds to all parts of the question (1 point).

While the thesis does not need to be a single sentence, it does need to be discrete, meaning it cannot be pieced together from across multiple places within the essay. It can be located in either the introduction or the conclusion, but not split between the two.

Acceptable thesis statements create an argument that responds to both tasks:

- identifying at least one relevant European view of non-European peoples, and
- identifying at least one example of intellectual change for the period from the 1760s to the 1910s; for example, views of European superiority, tolerance of other cultures, Romanticism, Social Darwinism, or imperialism.

Examples of acceptable thesis:

- “They didn’t possess the same sense of racial or ethnic supremacy that they felt when pursuing imperial policies in the East and in Africa. Over this time period, poorer treatment of foreign people, a sense of racial superiority, and strong prejudices drawing from nationalism marked the changing attitudes of Europeans to native, colonized people in other continents.”
- “Through the desire to expand and control non-European nations, the intellectual ideas of non-Europeans changed from an acceptance of the separate race to a profound and staunch belief and thought that European superiority was in fact real.”
- “Essentially, the view of many Europeans of their own “superiority” mirrored the progression of nationalism and imperialism, leading to strengthened opinions of disdain and inferiority toward non-European cultures.”

Examples of unacceptable thesis:

- These examples identify European views of non-European peoples but do not identify an intellectual change:
 - “The European view toward non-European countries changed from a respect toward the natives to a degrading of them, and finally to influencing them of their own values, demonstrating Europe’s intellectual changes.”
 - “Throughout the 1760s to the 1910s, intellectual changes were a reflection on the Europeans’ views on the abolition of slavery, superiority, and temptation for equality on non-European peoples and cultures.”

- This example identifies several intellectual changes in the period, but does not identify any European views of non-European peoples.
 - “The major aspects noted through these European individuals are the problems with slavery, racism, imperialism, and a need for nationalism in countries.”

b) Argument Development

To earn this point, responses must move beyond a single sentence or a listing of facts in support of the thesis or argument; they must explain the relationship of historical evidence to a complex and cohesive thesis or argument and do so throughout the essay. Evidence can be related to the argument in ways such as contradiction (e.g., using evidence to address a possible counterargument to the main argument in the essay), corroboration (e.g., combining multiple pieces of evidence to support a single argument), or qualification (e.g., use of evidence to present an argument that is subsequently made more complex by noting exceptions).

Unacceptable argument development would include:

- Responses that do not develop a cohesive essay
- Responses that simply parrot the documents or list the documents in order
- Responses that fail to organize documents in any meaningful way
- Responses that do not reconnect the evidence of the essay back to a thesis or argument

Examples of acceptable argument development:

- Response demonstrates several important connections between changes in views of non-Europeans and intellectual changes, but qualifies the argument by successfully demonstrating an instance or instances where the changing nature of colonialism actually affected European intellectual views, thereby suggesting that the causal flow is not always in one direction.
- Response argues successfully that European views of other peoples in the period were characterized mostly by changes stemming from intellectual shifts, but contradicts or qualifies that narrative by noting the persistence of certain motifs in European perceptions of others, e.g., the continued influence of the idea of the “Noble Savage”.

Examples of unacceptable argument development:

- “In contrast, some people actually saw other races in a more equal light.” This sentence marks a shift in the essay’s argument from a focus on views based on superiority to views based on relative equality. It could be considered an attempt at argument development that highlights contradiction. However, the argument does not correspond to the question asked; it focuses on the views of non-Europeans rather than intellectual developments behind those views, and it contrasts different views without focusing on change over time.

- Response makes serious chronological errors by assuming that the influence of later intellectual developments can be seen in sources that predate those developments, e.g., arguing that Document 1 is influenced by Social Darwinism.

B. Document Analysis (2 points)

a) Document Content

Responses earn one point by utilizing the content of at least six of the documents to support the stated thesis or a relevant argument (1 point). Responses cannot earn a point by merely quoting or paraphrasing the documents with no connection to a thesis or argument. (See the document summaries below for descriptions of document content.)

Examples of acceptable utilization of content of a document to support the argument:

- Use of content in Document 4: “Then in the late 19th century the French are thinking of imperialism and the ‘White Man’s Burden.’ No longer slaves but instead, just inferior, needing the mother country of France to show them the way.”

Examples of unacceptable utilization of content of a document to support a thesis or relevant argument:

- Misrepresentation of Document 2 for the purpose of analysis: “Josiah Wedgwood’s medallion design portrays the superior attitude of Europeans toward the African slaves. . . It shows the harsh conditions that they were subjected to due to the terrible attitude Europeans had.”

b) Significance of Point of View, Purpose, Context, and/or Audience

Responses also earn one point by explaining the significance of the author’s point of view, author’s purpose, historical context, and/or audience for at least four documents (1 point). (See the document summaries section below for description of point of view, purpose, historical context, and audience for each document.)

Example of acceptable explanation of the significance of the author’s point of view:

- For Document 7: “As British consul general in Egypt, the Earl of Cromer would have had direct interaction with Egyptians during his time as effective ruler of the country that would have reinforced his sense that British supervision was required.”

Example of unacceptable explanation of the significance of the author’s point of view:

- Implausible assertion for the point of view for Document 6: “As a physician, his words are probably twisted by readers as coming from a man from great intelligence.”

Example of acceptable explanation of the significance of the author’s purpose:

- For Document 7: “Ferry’s purpose in speaking about French national superiority was likely based on his desire to win favor with the voting public and maintain his position.”

Example of unacceptable explanation of the significance of the author’s purpose:

- Inaccurate assertion about the purpose of Document 5: “Paul Gauguin’s painting Barbaric Tales is directed towards the European people to show them the barbaric and primal nature of non-European people.”

Examples of acceptable explanation of the significance of the historical context of a document:

- Context for Document 2: “Document 2 . . . shows the lingering and escalating sense of European dominance. During this period, Europeans viewed foreign cultures as insignificant and saw native people as economic assets rather than human lives.”
- Context for Document 4: “During this time, the industrial revolutions took place in Europe, which meant that its nations were the most technologically advanced in the world, further inflating the European sense of racial superiority. Terms such as the ‘White Man’s Burden’ describe how the Europeans felt that, as an industrialized society, it was their duty to enlighten other peoples and help them reach the same (or similar) levels of development. Document 4, written by the French Prime Minister, states that it is the duty of Europeans to civilize ‘inferior races.’”
- Context for document 4: “Exemplified by Ferry’s 1885 speech, the ‘White Man’s Burden’ stated that it was the role of whites to ‘civilize’ non-White people around the globe — to bring their societies closer in line with European ideals and advancements. The idea of the ‘White Man’s Burden’ led to justification for brutal and oppressive European imperialism.”

Examples of unacceptable explanation of the significance of the historical context of a document:

- Inaccurate attempt for context for Document 3, as it is not linked to Napoleon: “In a book by François-René de Chateaubriand it talks of very Romantic ideas and thought. . . . This is in the time of Napoleon in power.”
- In this response the definition of the Noble Savage concept is erroneous and does not succeed in demonstrating valid context for the discussion of Atala (Document 3): “The novel demonstrates the idea of the Noble Savage, popular in Europe during the period. The Noble Savage concept showed indigenous peoples as barbarians who were incapable of being elevated beyond the level of savage.”

Examples of acceptable explanation of the significance of the audience:

- For Document 3: “Similarly, the novel Atala, whose intended audience was the European public, romanticized the cultures of non-Europeans.”
- For Document 4: “Because Ferry was speaking before a French audience, his assertions of French national superiority were likely based on his desire to win favor with the voting public and maintain his position.”

Examples of unacceptable explanation of the significance of the audience:

- Inaccurate explanation of audience for Document 4 as the information in the response is given in the source attribution: “Because this was a speech to the Chamber of Deputies it reflects his true ideas.”

- Incomplete explanation of audience as the response does not explain how the language influenced readers, nor what kind of influence the language exerted: “Schallmayer’s language was designed to influence his readers.”

C. Using Evidence Beyond the Documents (2 points)

a) Contextualization

Responses earn a point for contextualization by explaining the broader historical events, developments, or processes immediately relevant to the question (1 point). To earn the point, the essay must situate the thesis, argument, or parts of the argument by accurately and explicitly connecting European views of non-European peoples and cultures to larger global historical processes.

Examples of acceptable contextualization:

- This response provides contextualizing information throughout the essay that covers the time period indicated in the prompt: “At the beginning of this time period, colonization was not intellectually driven, but was instead seen as a fundamental element of mercantilism that was essential for a developed nation’s economic success and dominance. During the mid-18th century, in the peak of mercantilism . . . the British colonized North America. . . . In the 19th century, concepts such as racial Darwinism emerged to justify poor European treatment of other peoples. . . . The divergence of sentiments between those who favored imperialism and those who did not fully developed in the early-20th century. . . . At this point in time, nationalize played a huge role in European foreign policy. Europeans believed that their country was the most advanced, most developed in the world and thus believed that it was their right to expand and impose their supremacy on others.”
- “At the time from the late 1700s into the eighteenth century, although slavery was prominent, as we see demonstrated by a British medallion (Doc 2), Europeans demonstrated much greater tolerance and respect toward non-Europeans. Europe had not yet completed the Enlightenment, and also had yet to imperialize Africa and Asia. These events led to an intellectual change which would drastically alter the views Europeans held toward Non-Europeans. Upon completion of the Enlightenment, Europeans began to take on a superior mentality. . . . Known as the White Man’s Burden.”
- “In Europe from the 1760s to the 1910s, the world became more globalized. Improvements to sea navigation as well as an increased interest in exploration led many Europeans to travel outside of Europe in search of foreign lands.”

Examples of unacceptable contextualization:

- This attempt at contextualization by mentioning the French Revolution and the Napoleonic wars does not support the argument: “Even though France has been through many conflicts such as the French Revolution and the Napoleonic wars they must continue to work on becoming a strong nation and not be intimidated by their failures.”

- This attempt at contextualization is overly vague and makes faulty assumption regarding progress: “Between the periods of 1760–1910 the people of Europe changed a lot intellectually. This was clearly evident about the way they viewed non Europeans over time. The way they viewed the peoples shows a deeper understanding of other places because they were more tolerant.”

b) Evidence Beyond the Documents

Responses earn a separate point for providing an example or additional piece of specific evidence beyond those found in the documents to support or qualify the argument (1 point).

Examples of providing an example or additional piece of specific evidence beyond those found in the documents to support or qualify the argument:

- “As European countries began to desire territorial expansion and with that, economic expansion, an intellectual stigma deemed the ‘White Man’s Burden’ by Rudyard Kipling, and the theory of Social Darwinism became prevalent.”
- “The word ‘competition’ evokes Darwin’s idea of survival of the fittest — that the strongest and fittest matters in reproducing and was a scientific justification of imperialism.”
- “As a member of the British Consul, Baring would recommend a permanent English presence because it is in the best interest of England economically. The British economy benefitted greatly from having control of the Suez Canal in Egypt.”

Example of improperly providing an example or additional piece of specific evidence beyond those found in the documents to support or qualify the argument:

- In their analysis of Document 4, this response could have added in a specific example like “Social Darwinism” or Rudyard Kipling’s “The White Man’s Burden” to earn this point: “French Prime Minister Jules Ferry (Doc 4) directly states that it is the duty of superior races to civilize the inferior races. He calls for them to be taught the French ways and language to bring them closer to what is seen as a proper civilization.”

D. Synthesis (1 point)

Responses earn a point for synthesis by extending their argument in one of three possible ways (1 point).

- Responses can extend their argument by appropriately connecting European views of non-European peoples and cultures reflected the intellectual changes of the period from the 1760s to the 1910s to other historical periods, situations, eras or geographical areas. (Synthesis proficiency C4). These connections must consist of more than just a phrase or reference.

Examples of acceptable synthesis by appropriately connecting the argument to a development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographic area:

- A response that effectively compares and/or contrasts European colonialism during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries with the “new imperialism” of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries successfully earn synthesis for extending the argument.
- A response that discusses the idea of the White Man’s Burden as a justification for American intervention in the Philippines and the initiation of the Spanish-American War earns synthesis for extending the argument.
- This response opens the essay by connecting the time period of the question — 1760s to the 1910s — to fifteenth and sixteenth century European exploration and, in the conclusion, hints at later 20th century anti-imperialist movements.
- “Since the discovery of luxurious non-European goods and their prosperous economic nature, European intervention outside of Europe steadily increased. Focused by the motives of “god, glory, and gold” Europeans systematically discovered each inch of the globe and thus created inevitable circumstances of interaction between Europeans and non-Europeans lasting from late 1700s to early 1900s. . . . Thus it is in this condescending and derogatory attitude that fostered anti-imperialism movements in European colonies across the globe into the twentieth century.”

Example that did not accurately connect the argument to a development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographic area:

- A response that lists events from other time periods or areas but does not explain how they relate to the argument cannot earn a synthesis point.
- b) Responses can extend their argument by appropriately connecting European views of non-European peoples and cultures reflected the intellectual changes of the period from the 1760s to the 1910s to course themes and/or approaches to history that are not the main focus of the (Synthesis proficiency C5). These connections must consist of more than just a phrase or reference.

Examples of acceptable synthesis by connecting the argument to different course themes and/or approaches to history that are not the main focus of the question:

- A possible example might be an essay that discussed the painting by Gauguin in terms of gender history.
- A possible example might be an essay that analyzes the differential economic impacts of European imperialism.

Examples that did not appropriately connect the argument to course themes and/or approaches to history that are not the main focus of the question:

- This response makes an attempt at this type of synthesis in its analysis of Document 6. The response makes an effort to draw upon political themes in its discussion of the competition between different European countries to explain early 20th century European imperialism. However, the response falls short because it lacks sufficient specific details (for example “Scramble for Africa,”) and a greater elaboration of the political tensions and competition.

- “In the early 20th century the sense of nationalism had spread to the newly unified Germany. Germany wanted its place in the Sun to carve up Africa, the way the British, French, and Dutch were doing so quickly. (Doc 6) Exemplifies this point of new saying Europeans discovered and conquered the world, and any way a ‘backwards’ country could arrive in this competitive era, was with the help of Europeans. This point of view from German physician makes sense because Germany was just itching to get their hands on any piece of land to prove themselves as a European Power. They were not a part of the first Industrial Revolution, so they felt there was something to prove.”
- The analysis of the Gauguin painting in this response hints at using gender and race as analytical categories, but the reference is too fleeting to qualify for this type of synthesis.
- “Finally in Doc 5, Gauguin paints the Polynesian women...By portraying this European man with the two women, he paints a sort of equality between the two races.”

- c) Responses can extend their argument by using insights from a different discipline or field of inquiry to explain how European views of non-European peoples and cultures reflected the intellectual changes of the period from the 1760s to the 1910s. (Synthesis proficiency C6). These connections must consist of more than just a phrase or reference.

Examples of acceptable synthesis by using insights from a different discipline or field of inquiry to extend the argument:

- A possible example might be employing art historical analysis in the discussion of the Wedgewood medallion (Document 2) or the Gauguin painting (Document 5).
- A possible example might be employing literary analysis in the discussion of Chateaubriand (Document 3).
- A possible example might be using an understanding of psychology to further the discussion of the eyewitness account of the British punitive expedition against rebellious Native American groups (Document 1), the painting by Gauguin of two Polynesian women and a European man (Document 5), or the Earl of Cromer’s memoir of his time as consul general in Egypt (Document 7).

Examples that did not appropriately use insights from a different discipline or field of inquiry to extend the argument:

- The analysis of the Gauguin painting in this response uses terms that have sociological inferences “primitive” and “savage” but fails to provide any elaboration that brings in insights from the discipline of sociology to extend the argument and interpretation of this painting: “In Paul Gauguin’s painting “Barbaric Tales,” the two Polynesian women are portrayed as primitive and almost savage (Doc 5).

- The analysis of the Gauguin painting in this response incorporates some aspects of art historical analysis, through its discussion of nature and describing the relationship between the individuals in the painting, but it falls short of earning this type of synthesis due to the limited scope of its visual analysis:
 - “Finally in Doc 5, Gauguin paints the Polynesian women. This document is very romantic because it emphasizes the nature and natural aspect of the Polynesians’ life. By portraying this European man with the two women, he paints a sort of equality between the two races.”
- The analysis of Chateaubriand’s Atala in this response falls short of a literary analysis: “Even contemporary fiction sees this tragedy of assimilation in “Atala” (Doc 3) a Native American child grows unhappy and distant forced to adopt foreign ways of life, though he learns much, it is no use to him where he will go.”

Document Summaries

The following pages present the DBQ documents along with the key aspects of each that students might offer in support of their arguments. Also provided are some of the major subjects, concepts, themes, or processes mentioned in the course that students might use to contextualize their arguments.

Source: William Smith, British soldier, eyewitness account of a 1764 British punitive expedition against rebellious Native American groups in the Ohio country, 1766.

Since [the terms of the truce] demanded that the Indians release all White prisoners in their possession . . . most of these prisoners arrived in our camp, amounting to 206. . . .

There were to be seen fathers and mothers recognizing and clasping their once-lost babes; husbands hanging around the necks of their newly-recovered wives; sisters and brothers unexpectedly meeting together after long separation, scarce able to speak the same language.

The Indians too, as if wholly forgetting their usual savageness, bore an important part in heightening this most affecting scene. They delivered up their beloved captives with the utmost reluctance; shed torrents of tears over them, recommending them to the care and protection of the commanding officer. They visited them from day to day; and brought them what corn, skins, horses, and other matters they had bestowed on them, while in their families. . . .

Those qualities in savages challenge our just esteem. They should make us charitably consider their barbarities as the effects of wrong education, and false notions of bravery and heroism; while we should look on their virtues as sure marks that nature has made them fit subjects of cultivation as well as us. Cruel and unmerciful as they are, by habit and long example in war, yet whenever they come to give way to the native dictates of humanity, they exercise virtues which Christians need not blush to imitate.

Summary of key points explaining content of source or argument made by the author:

- A truce required Native Americans to release all white prisoners.
- There were happy reunions between separated families but also tears and gifts from Native Americans.
- The soldier commented on how such behavior challenged his notions, saying, “They should make us charitably consider their barbarities as the effects of wrong education . . . while we should look on their virtues as sure marks that nature has made them fit subjects of cultivation as well as us . . . whenever they come to give way to the native dictates of humanity they exercise virtues which Christians need not blush to imitate.”

Examples of author's point of view:

- As a soldier who was recently engaged in warfare against the Indians, the author's favorable description of the Indians' behavior might carry more weight since he might ordinarily be expected to be hostile to them.
- As an eyewitness to the events that he describes, the author might be considered a more reliable source than someone getting this information secondhand.

Example of author's purpose:

- The author is trying to sway his audience so he may be exaggerating some of the features of the scene for dramatic effect.

Examples of historical context:

- The idea of the "Noble Savage" was an increasingly important idea in Enlightenment culture and may have influenced the soldier's account, making him more likely to see the Indians in a positive light.
- The author's stress on the extreme emotions shown by the Indians may be influenced by early Romantic ideas about the value of sentiment and emotion as a source of truth.
- By this point in the history of colonial North America, the British generally have the upper hand in wars against the Indians, so it may be easier for a British soldier to see Indians in a positive way.

Examples of audience:

- The author is addressing his account to fellow Europeans who may know little about Indians, so the author may be attempting to overcome certain prejudices about Indians.
- The soldier is not addressing the Native Americans (who are unlikely to see or read his account) so he is free to portray them however he wished, without fear of being contradicted.

Source: Josiah Wedgwood, early British industrialist, Am I not a Man and a Brother?, ceramic medallion created for the Society for Effecting the Abolition of the Slave Trade, 1787.

© The Trustees of the British Museum / Art Resource, NY

Summary of key points explaining content of source or argument made by the author:

- The medallion shows the picture of a black man on one knee, his wrists and ankles bound in chains, his head tilted up and hands clasped, as if in prayer.

Example of author's point of view:

- As an industrialist, Wedgwood was likely to support wage labor rather than slave labor.
- As an Englishman, Wedgwood was likely influenced by English traditions regarding the value of individual liberty.

Example of author's purpose:

- The medallion was intended to inspire anti-slavery sentiment, so it portrays slavery in stark moral terms.

Examples of historical context:

- The message of the medallion is influenced by Christian ideas of the brotherhood of all people, regardless of race.
- The medallion was produced during a period of evangelical Christian revival in Britain and North America.
- The message of the medallion may be influenced by Enlightenment ideas about universal human rights.
- The growth of industrialization and the factory system in England made slavery and other forms of coerced labor seem less economically rational.

Example of audience:

- The medallion may have been intended to be worn mostly by people who already belong to the Society, so it is conveying the anti-slavery message in the strongest possible terms.

Source: Chactaw, a fictional Native American character in Atala, a novel by the French writer François-René de Chateaubriand, published in 1801.

[After my father was killed] . . . an old Spaniard in the town of St. Augustine [in Florida], named Lopez, touched with my youth and simplicity, offered me an asylum. He took the greatest care of my education; and procured me the best instructors in the various branches of science.

But after passing thirty moons in this manner, I began to be disgusted with social life. I grew pale and emaciated. Sometimes I stood for whole hours immovable, contemplating the far distant forests, rising into mountains to the clouds. Sometimes they found me seated on the banks of a river, regarding its gentle current in melancholy silence.

Being unable any longer to resist the desire of returning to the wilderness, I appeared one morning before Lopez, in my savage dress, holding in one hand my bow and arrows, and in the other my European garments. These I returned to my generous benefactor, at whose feet I fell, shedding a torrent of tears, accusing myself of ingratitude. At length, I cried: “Oh my father, thou thyself knowest that, unless I enter again upon my wandering life after the Indian manner, I certainly shall die.”

Lopez, . . . seeing I was resolved to encounter every danger, clasped me in his arms, and, with tears in his eyes, exclaimed: “Go, magnanimous child of nature! Enjoy this invaluable independence of man! Were I a few years younger, I would myself accompany thee to the wilderness.”

Summary of key points explaining content of source or argument made by the author:

- Lopez, “an old Spaniard,” offers asylum to and provides education for Chactaw, an orphaned Native American.
- Chactaw feels a conflict between gratitude for his generous benefactor and “the desire of returning to the wilderness.”
- Reluctantly, Chactaw appears before Lopez and tearfully affirms his decision to “enter again upon my wandering life after the Indian manner.”
- Lopez emotionally agrees, “Go magnanimous child of nature . . . Were I a few years younger, I would myself accompany thee to the wilderness.”

Example of author’s point of view:

- Chateaubriand may not have much first-hand knowledge of Indians, so his account may be more a projection of certain ideas than a realistic portrayal of interactions between Europeans and indigenous people.

Example of author’s purpose:

- Chateaubriand wrote his novel to entertain Europeans, so it would be likely to show colonizers in a positive rather than negative light.

Examples of historical context:

- The idea of the “Noble Savage” was an increasingly important idea in Enlightenment culture and probably influenced Chateaubriand’s portrayal of the Indian.
- The Romantic movement’s emphasis on sentiment and on emotions probably influenced Chateaubriand.

Example of audience:

- The novel is aimed at a European audience, so Chateaubriand may be employing certain stereotypes about Indians that his audience expects to see.

Source: Jules Ferry, French prime minister, speech to the Chamber of Deputies, July 1885.

The superior races have a duty to civilize the inferior races. In the history of earlier centuries these duties have often been misunderstood; and certainly when the Spanish soldiers and explorers introduced slavery into Central America, they did not fulfill their duty as men of a higher race. But, in our time, I maintain that European nations acquit themselves with generosity, and with sincerity of this civilizing duty. Could anyone deny that there is more justice, more order, more equity, more social virtue in North Africa now that France has conquered it? . . . Is it possible to deny that it would be a great fortune for the hapless inhabitants of equatorial Africa to fall under the protection of the French or the English nation? Hasn't it been our first priority in these places to combat the human trafficking of Africans, and the infamy of slavery? . . .

Gentlemen, in Europe such as it is today, in this competition of the many rivals we see rising up around us, . . . a policy of withdrawal or abstention [from imperial expansion] is simply the high road to ruin! . . . Spreading our light without acting, without taking part in the affairs of the world, seeing all expansion into Africa or the Orient either as a trap or as a mere adventure: for a great nation to live in this way, believe me, is to abdicate its responsibilities. . . . One cannot suggest that France should conform to the same political ideals as a free Belgium or a republican Switzerland. There is something else about France — she cannot afford to be just a free country, she must also be a great country. She must spread her influence over the world and export wherever she can her language, her ways, her flag, her force of arms, her genius!

Summary of key points explaining content of source or argument made by the author:

- Superior races have a duty to “civilize the inferior races,” but in the past these duties have been misused.
- By 1885 it is possible to claim that there is more justice, order, and social virtue in North Africa under French control.
- The “hapless inhabitants” of equatorial Africa are fortunate to be under French and English protection.
- It is France’s priority to combat the “infamy of slavery.”
- Countries withdrawing or abstaining from imperial expansion are abdicating their responsibilities and France, as a great country, must “spread her influence over the world.”

Examples of author’s point of view:

- As a government leader of France, Ferry is likely trying to portray his country’s actions in the best possible light.
- Because he was Prime Minister of France, Ferry wanted to demonstrate the strength of French imperialism as a means of enhancing his own political power and prestige.

Example of author's purpose:

- Since Ferry is probably trying to convince some people of the desirability of further colonial expansion, he may be exaggerating some of the benefits and minimizing the drawbacks of having an empire.

Examples of historical context:

- Ferry is probably influenced by ideas of Social Darwinism, which held that some races were superior to others and therefore “deserved” to rule them.
- Ferry was likely influenced by ideas of nationalism and national competition and portrays colonialism as an extension of European rivalries.
- Ferry is speaking at a time when the exploration and colonization of the interior of Africa is intensifying (“the scramble for Africa”) and this accounts for his sense of urgency.
- Ferry is speaking at a time when European industrial production was beginning to create a surplus of consumer goods and a need for access to more markets in which to sell them.

Example of audience:

- Since Ferry is speaking to an audience of lawmakers in a public forum, he may be more inclined to portray colonialism as a moral mission rather than merely a source of economic gain.

Document 5

Source: Paul Gauguin, Barbaric Tales, painting showing two Polynesian women and a European man, painted during Gauguin's residence in Tahiti, 1902.

Summary of key points explaining content of source or argument made by the author:

- Exotic, bucolic background with two seated, half-naked women looking rather impassively at the viewer; one is cross-legged and one is kneeling in the foreground.
- One of the women is a darker Polynesian; the other woman is a lighter haired Polynesian with flowers wound in her hair.
- Behind the women is a fully dressed — possibly in monkish attire — European man wearing a hat.
- The man has pronounced features, with one hand clutching his beard.
- His feet shown with claws projecting from the toes.

Examples of author's point of view:

- As an artist Gauguin is using his subjects to express his admiration of Polynesians rather than creating a realistic portrayal.
- As someone who chose to leave Europe and travel to Polynesia, Gauguin may have been more likely to see Europe and Europeans in a negative light.

Example of author's purpose:

- Gauguin is portraying an idealized vision of Polynesians as pure, innocent and beautiful, so he exaggerates the ugliness of the European man to make his point more strongly.

Examples of historical context:

- At the time that Gauguin is painting, some Europeans had begun to question the ideas of European superiority and criticize colonialism.
- Gauguin's painting was composed at a time when steamships and railroads were beginning to allow more Europeans to travel overseas; this is creating a greater demand for images of exotic places.

Example of audience:

- Gauguin is painting for Europeans who have mostly not been to Polynesia, so he is free to use the setting to express his feelings.

Document 6

Wilhelm Schallmayer, German physician, “Heredity and Selection in the Life History of Nations,” essay, 1903.

Competition makes some nations and races powerful and brings other, backward nations and races into decline. Compared to the constant and imminent threat of being outcompeted [by another human group], other threats in Nature pale in significance. In our present time, we can observe entire races of people dying out, races whose hunting grounds and other subsistence resources have been taken away by the White race and whose venerable religious and moral traditions have been destroyed. . . . The unheard of interconnectedness of the last century has brought some backward peoples to the brink of extinction. Over the course of the last five hundred years, all native peoples of the world’s continents and islands have been discovered by Europeans. These native peoples were only viable for as long as they remained unknown, shielded from competition with the superior European race.

Summary of key points explaining content of source or argument made by the author:

- Competition has the unfortunate but inevitable effect of wiping out “backward nations.”
- All native peoples of the world were “only viable for as long as they remained unknown, shielded from competition with the superior European race.”

Example of author’s point of view:

- As a physician, Schallmayer is trying to impose a scientific viewpoint on his assessment of Europe’s interactions with the rest of the world.

Example of author’s purpose:

- Schallmayer is trying to make sense of 500 years of complex history in a short treatise, so he tends to simplify his explanation to single idea — European superiority.

Examples of historical context:

- Schallmayer is writing at a time when new technological breakthroughs in Europe were increasing the European sense of superiority over other peoples.
- Schallmayer’s confident tone may be the result of writing at a time when the unified German Empire is rapidly increasing its political and economic power.
- The increasing competition between European states in the late nineteenth century may have led Schallmayer to project this sense of competition onto the world as a whole.
- Schallmayer is clearly influenced by Social Darwinist idea about the struggle for survival among “more fit” and “less fit” nations.

Example of audience:

- Schallmayer is writing for other Europeans so he is more likely to portray them as superior to non-Europeans.

Document 7

Source: Evelyn Baring, Earl of Cromer, British consul general in Egypt and effective ruler of the country from 1883 to 1907, Modern Egypt, memoir, published 1908.

The European is a close reasoner; his statements of fact are devoid of ambiguity; he is a natural logician; he loves symmetry in all things; he is by nature skeptical and requires proof before he can accept the truth of any proposition. The mind of the Oriental, on the other hand, like his picturesque streets, is eminently wanting in symmetry. His reasoning is of the most slipshod description. . . . Endeavor to elicit a plain statement of facts from an ordinary Egyptian. His explanation will generally be lengthy, and wanting in lucidity. He will probably contradict himself half-a-dozen times before he has finished his story. . . .

Nevertheless, there is one saving clause, which serves in some respects as a bond of union between the two races. Once explain to an Egyptian what he is to do, and he will assimilate the idea rapidly. He is a good imitator, and will make a faithful, even sometimes a too servile copy of the work of his European teacher. His civilization may be a veneer, yet he will readily adopt the letter, the catchwords and jargon, if not the spirit of European administrative systems. His movements will, it is true, be not infrequently those of an automaton, but a skillfully constructed automaton may do a great deal of useful work. . . . So long as British supervision is maintained, the Egyptian will readily copy the practices and procedures of his English teachers. On the other hand, inasmuch as the Egyptian has but little power of initiation, and often does not thoroughly grasp the reasons why his teachers have impelled him in certain directions, a relapse will ensue if British supervision be withdrawn.

Summary of key points explaining content of source or argument made by the author:

- Europeans are empirical, reasonable, and skeptical.
- Egyptians have only one “saving clause” — that they can be trained to imitate British administrative procedures.
- Egyptians lack initiative and without British guidance will lose the veneer of civility.

Examples of author’s point of view:

- As a colonial ruler, Cromer is inclined to justify European control over other areas of the world.
- As a member of the British government at a time when Britain ruled the largest colonial empire in the world, Cromer is prone to champion the idea that colonialism is right.

Examples of author’s purpose:

- As a memoir published while Britain continues to have effective control over Egypt, Cromer’s book is most likely intended to support continued British rule.

- As a personal memoir, Cromer may have tried to portray his actions in Egypt in a way that reflects positively on his historical legacy by justifying British rule.

Examples of historical context:

- Cromer is writing at a time when Europe continued to have superior technology and more effective institutions than many other areas of the world so he assumes that this is the natural order of things.
- Cromer is likely influenced by Social Darwinist notions, as demonstrated by his references to “superior” and “inferior” races.

Example of audience:

- Since this book is probably aimed primarily at a British audience at the height of British imperialism, it naturally supports the idea that colonial rule is morally and culturally justified.

Scoring Guidelines and Notes for Long Essay Question 2

Analyze the ways in which the arts of the Renaissance period reflected new conceptions of the individual.

Curriculum Framework Alignment

Learning Objectives	OS-2 Analyze how religious reform in the 16th and 17th centuries, the expansion of printing, and the emergence of civic venues such as salons and coffeehouses challenged the control of the church over the creation and dissemination of knowledge. OS-5 Analyze how the development of Renaissance humanism, the printing press, and the scientific method contributed to the emergence of a new theory of knowledge and conception of the universe. OS-10 Analyze the means by which individualism, subjectivity, and emotion came to be considered a valid source of knowledge. SP-1 Explain the emergence of civic humanism and new conceptions of political authority during the Renaissance, as well as subsequent theories and practices that stressed the political importance and rights of the individual. IS-3 Evaluate the role of technology, from the printing press to modern transportation and telecommunications, in forming and transforming society.

Key Concepts from the Curriculum Framework	1.1 I A 1.1 I B 1.1 I C 1.1 II A 1.1 III A 1.1 III B 1.1 III C

Maximum Possible Points: 6

Please note:

- Each point of the rubric is earned independently, e.g., a student could earn the point for synthesis without earning the point for thesis.

- Unique evidence from the student response is required to earn each point, e.g., evidence in the student response that qualifies for either of the targeted skill points could not be used to earn the point for thesis.

A. THESIS (1 POINT)

Targeted Skill: Argumentation (E1)

- 1 point Presents a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim and responds to all parts of the question. The thesis must consist of one or more sentences located in one place, either in the introduction or the conclusion.
- 0 points Does not present a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim and responds to all parts of the question.

B. ARGUMENT DEVELOPMENT: USING THE TARGETED HISTORICAL THINKING SKILL (2 POINTS)

Targeted Skills: Argumentation (E2 and E3) and Causation (D1 and D2)

- 1 point Describes causes AND effects of a historical event, development, or process.
- 1 point Explains the reasons for the causes AND effects of a historical event, development, or process.
- 0 points Does not describe causes AND effects of a historical event, development, or process.

Scoring Note:

- If the prompt requires discussion of both causes and effects — as this one does — responses must address both causes and effects in order to earn either point.

C. ARGUMENT DEVELOPMENT: USING EVIDENCE (2 POINTS)

Targeted Skill: Argumentation (E2 and E3)

- 1 point Addresses the topic of the question with specific examples of relevant evidence.
- 1 point Utilizes specific examples of evidence to fully and effectively substantiate the stated thesis or a relevant argument.
- 0 points Does not address the topic of the question with specific examples of relevant evidence.

Scoring Note:

- To fully and effectively substantiate the stated thesis or a relevant argument, responses must include a broad range of evidence that, through analysis and explanation, justifies the stated thesis or a relevant argument.

D. SYNTHESIS (1 POINT)

Targeted Skill: Synthesis (C4, C5, or C6)

- 1 point Extends the argument by explaining the connections between the argument and one of the following:
- a) A development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area.
 - b) A course theme and/or approach to history that is not the focus of the essay (such as political, economic, social, cultural, or intellectual history).
 - c) A different discipline or field of inquiry (such as economics, government and politics, art history, or anthropology) (Note: For World and European History only).
- 0 points Does not extend the argument by explaining the connections between the argument and the other areas listed.

Scoring Note:

- The synthesis point requires an explanation of the connections to different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area, and is not awarded for merely a phrase or reference.

On Accuracy: The components of this rubric each require that students demonstrate historically defensible content knowledge. Given the timed nature of the exam, the essay may contain errors that do not detract from the overall quality, as long as the historical content used to advance the argument is accurate.

On Clarity: These essays should be considered first drafts and thus may contain grammatical errors. Those errors will not be counted against a student unless they obscure the successful demonstration of the content knowledge and skills described above.

Scoring Notes

Note: Student samples are quoted verbatim and may contain grammatical errors.

Note: Each point can be earned independently.

A. Thesis (1 point)

Responses earn one point by presenting a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim that responds to all parts of the question (1 point).

While the thesis does not need to be a single sentence, it does need to be discrete, meaning it cannot be pieced together from across multiple places within the essay. It can be located in either the introduction or the conclusion, but not split between the two.

Acceptable thesis statements create an argument that responds to both tasks:

- identifying relevant new conceptions of the individual in the Renaissance, and
- explaining artistic manifestations of these conceptions

The thesis needs to address both causes (new conceptions of the individual) as well as effects (artistic manifestations of these conceptions).

Examples of acceptable thesis:

- “Art, such as painting and sculpture, focused on the beauty of the human form while the literature of the period glorified the brilliance of humanity and self-interest, and a new emphasis on education resulted from a new image of human capability.”
- “The arts of this period reflect this new concept of the individual (humanism) by shifting from only glorifying God to also glorifying man, being used as a symbol of power, and that artistry could be an occupation.”
- “The concept of individual power was revealed in sculptures and paintings of the time and in literature, which focused less upon the immortal God, but more on the values of human nature.”

Examples of unacceptable theses:

- A thesis that only focuses on the effects, in this case, the artistic manifestations, with no discussion of the new conceptions of the individual. Additionally, this thesis attempt used examples (Romanticism) out of the chronological scope of the question.
 - “Humanism and Romanticism were two forms of art which depicted subjects in completely different ways than before.”
- A thesis that makes no attempt to specify the new conceptions of the individual.
 - “Arts during the Renaissance reflected new untraditional conceptions of the individual with realistic paintings and drifted away from homogenous-looking portraits.”
- A thesis that only focuses on the causes, in this case, the new conceptions of the individual, with no discussion of the effects, or artistic manifestations. Additionally, this example includes irrelevant reference to mercantilism.

- “Humanism and secularism were two new ideas that were focused on during the Renaissance. These ideas led to self-glorification, realism, and mercantilism.”

B. Argument Development: Using the Targeted Historical Thinking Skill
(2 points)

Note: If the prompt requires discussion of both causes and effects — as this one does — responses must address both causes and effects in order to earn either point.

a) Argument Development — Describes

Responses earn one point by describing the ways in which new conceptions of the individual in the Renaissance (causes) affected the artistic manifestations of this period (effects). (1 point)

Examples of acceptable description of causes and effects:

- In conjunction with a discussion of humanism: “The power of the individual was emphasized far more than in the Middle Ages. Castiglione’s The Book of the Courtier highlights exactly how much man can do when armed with politeness, good graces, and a silver tongue.”
- In conjunction with a discussion of secularism: “Although religious based arts were still produced, the Lord was no longer the sole muse of the artist, especially in Italian art.” (The essay went on to support the assertion with a discussion of The Prince.)

Examples of unacceptable descriptions of causes and effects:

- The essay confuses cause and effect, showing art as the cause and new conceptions as the effect. It attempts to argue that new conceptions of the individual were the product of artistic changes, instead of arts reflecting the new conceptions as required by the question: “Artists during the Renaissance period changed the pattern of thinking at the time by portraying the human figure in most ideal form and by changing the ways humans thought about themselves separately from God.”

b) Argument Development — Explains

Responses can earn the point here by explaining the reasons for new conceptions of the individual (causes) AND explaining how the new conceptions manifested themselves through the arts (effects). (1 point)

Examples of acceptable explanation of reasons for causes and effects:

- In conjunction with a discussion of several Renaissance literary works, the essay explains reasons for the new conceptions of the individual: “In addition, because of the successes of Renaissance activities, a new mindset became dominant — humanism. The power of the individual was emphasized far more than in the Middle Ages.”
- In conjunction with a discussion of Renaissance religious art, the essay explains reasons for the new conceptions of the individual: “Perhaps the largest departure from Middle Aged thought processes was the concept of secularism. Throughout all of history thus far, one can see that papal authority and scriptural word went unquestioned. However, through usage of . . . the aforementioned humanism, one can pinpoint the ease with which an individual could come to break free from the church.”

Examples of unacceptable explanation of reasons for causes and effects:

- The response attempts to argue that the new conceptions of the individual were the product of the artists, instead of the arts reflecting the new conceptions as required by the question: “Once individuals were seen as superior, Renaissance artists sought to improve the human individual even more. Artists need to improve humans because of the humanistic idea.”
- The response attempts to argue that the new conceptions of the individual were the product of the art, instead of the arts reflecting the new conceptions as required by the question: “By glorifying humans in art, people were able to understand the importance of the individual and then they were willing to improve it.”
- This response is vague and overly generalized: “The transition from God as the most amazing being to man being equally as amazing as God, changed the foundation of all individual thinking.”

C. Argument Development: Using Evidence (2 points)

a) Using Evidence — Examples

Responses can earn one point by addressing the topic of the question by referring to specific examples or relevant evidence (1 point). Essays can earn this point without having a stated thesis or a relevant argument.

Examples of specific evidence that could be used to address the topic of the question:

- Specific works of Renaissance art and/or artists, such as Michelangelo’s David or Sistine Chapel frescoes, Leonardo Da Vinci’s The Last Supper, etc.
- Specific works of Renaissance literature, such as Castiglione’s The Book of the Courtier, Machiavelli’s The Prince, etc.
- Artistic patronage by political rulers
- New architectural forms based on classical styles
- Renaissance humanism
- Rebirth of classical values and learning
- Study of anatomy and the human form

Examples of unsuccessfully using evidence to address the topic of the question:

- Evidence that is factually incorrect, confused about chronology, or not directly relevant to the question
 - “With less focus on religion people were able to keep money in their pockets and upgrade their social class.”
 - “Romanticism was the age of togetherness and positive aspects of society.”
 - “Humanism was the addition of less surrealism and more realistic types of painting.”

b) Using Evidence — Effective Substantiation

Responses earn a separate point by utilizing specific examples of evidence to fully and effectively substantiate a thesis or relevant argument about how the arts reflected new conceptions of the individuals in the Renaissance period (1 point). Fully and effectively substantiating the thesis goes beyond merely providing many examples. This point is earned by clearly and consistently linking significant evidence to the argument and showing how the evidence demonstrates how arts reflected new conceptions of the individual in the Renaissance.

Examples of evidence that could be utilized to substantiate an argument:

- The response relates humanism to increasing secularism and cites the example of how through “handwriting analysis and period examination, the once-accepted religious article Donation of Constantine was found to be a fraud.”
- The response relates artistic patronage to individualism: “The popularity of commissioning art as a display of power is a reflection of the Renaissance concept of the individual because the purpose of art was to show that there is greatness here on earth in humanity, which is a core idea in the Renaissance concept of the individual.”
- The response cites Castiglione and Sir Thomas More as examples of Renaissance authors who wrote about contemporary and classical values to help “perfect human society.”

Examples of unsuccessfully attempting to substantiate an argument with evidence:

- The response does not link the evidence fully to substantiate the argument.
 - David “is about power of men who can defeat giants in battle.”
- The response is no more than a simple description.
 - “Painters focused on capturing the emotions and feelings of others in ...works of art including painting and literature.”
 - “At this time artists first started to sign their art, so they would be glorified.”
 - “Literature also began to become very popular in the fact that it adopted the ideas of humanism/romanticism.”

D. Synthesis (1 point)

Responses earn a point for synthesis by extending their argument in one of three possible ways (1 point).

- a) Responses can extend their argument by explaining the connections between their argument and a development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area. (Synthesis proficiency C4). These connections must consist of more than just a phrase or reference.

Examples of synthesis by connecting the argument to a development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area:

- The response offers a comparison between the Renaissance and antiquity or the Middle Ages in a sustained way.
 - The response makes the claim that “Perhaps the largest departure from Middle Aged thought processes was the concept of secularism” followed up by specific evidence, including a discussion of the decline of the authority of the Papacy, the increase in non-religious subjects for art of all types, and the rise of scientific and religious challenges to the Catholic Church due to the work of Galileo and Martin Luther.
 - A new focus on secular education developed during the renaissance. Scholars returned to the study of the ancient greek and roman philosophers. In the middle ages, the educated were either among the clergy or educated by members of the clergy as the best schools in Europe were in monasteries, convents and cathedrals. The Renaissance ushered in a new intellectual movement that broke away from the scholasticism of the middle ages...”
- The response demonstrates the impact of the new Renaissance conceptions of the individual on subsequent time periods.

Examples that did not accurately connect the argument to a development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area:

- The response attempts to make a connection with a different time period but demonstrates inaccuracies and/or misunderstanding of chronology.
 - Linking Humanism with Surrealism and stating that Renaissance art focused on “realistic types of painting” and was a rejection of Surrealism’s “unrealistic backgrounds and setting to make the painting more impactful.”
 - The response attempts to contrast Renaissance art with medieval art, but this comparison consists of only a brief reference which is insufficient to qualify for this point.
 - “In the previous medieval era art had mostly just been used to glorify God and there was never any stress placed on the beauty of man, but with the Renaissance’s new concept of the individual the glorification of man through art became common.”
- b) Responses can extend their argument by explaining the connections between their argument and a course theme and/or approach to history that is not the focus of the essay (such as political, economic, social, cultural, or intellectual history). (Synthesis proficiency C5) These connections must consist of more than just a phrase or reference.

Examples of synthesis by connecting the argument to a different course theme or approach to history:

- The response draws upon aspects of political history in the Renaissance to explain new artistic practices:
 - “As the states grew in power such as Florence and Venice, secularism became more prominent. The rulers promoted patriotism to one’s state as they reached out to bring in more talents, more artwork and more glory to their state. No longer was Italy focused on spreading Christianity, rather this more secular time period focused on the glory of a human and their state. The artwork of the Renaissance gives the window into the ideals of the Renaissance. The paintings and statues that exemplified the human body and mind show the push for Humanism and a focus on the individual.”

Examples that did not accurately connect the argument to a different course theme or approach to history:

- The response attempts to incorporate intellectual history but does not go far enough to earn the point.
 - “Humanism embraced humans and the focus of oneself, and by focusing on oneself new scientific discoveries were made about the human body.”
 - The response attempts to use social history (class distinctions) to explain the emergence of new artistic practices (portraiture), but the response does not provide any specific examples or use this analysis to further an argument.
 - “Prior to the Renaissance, portraits were rarely done to represent a single person, but as time progressed, having a self-portrait represented great class and eliteness. By having a self-portrait done, it became apparent to others that whomever had one was a sophisticated, upper class individual. This was backed up by the peasants and the lower classes, as they believed that if one person had a whole portrait dedicated to themselves, they must be an important figure.”
- c) Responses can extend their argument by explaining the connections between their argument and a different discipline or field of inquiry. (Synthesis proficiency C6) These connections must consist of more than just a phrase or reference.

Examples of synthesis by connecting the argument to a different discipline or field of inquiry:

- The response incorporates the terminology (e.g., “flat,” “two-dimensional,” “proportional,” “symmetry,” “shading and light,” etc.) and methodology (e.g., formal analysis of artistic style) that art historians use to describe the shift in artistic representation of humans from the Middle Ages to the Renaissance.
 - “Prior to the Renaissance, works of art were predominantly flat, two-dimensional, and unrealistically proportional. Humans simply did not look like humans. However when the Renaissance erupted so did Humanism and through humanism’s stress on the beauty of the human body, realistic, anatomical, and proportional representations of the human figure came to be. Artists would, rather than just simply paint the image of a man, study the real body of one, note how the muscles flexed and where bones were most prominent. Leonardo da Vinci in his many sketches would discover the proportional construction of the human body... New techniques on creating a portrait's shadows helped form a realistic image...da Vinci's "The Last Supper" would highlight the use of shading and light along with symmetry."

Examples that did not accurately connect the argument to a different discipline or field of inquiry:

- The response refers to scientific advances in anatomy but fails to identify scientists (e.g., Vesalius) and specific concepts and advances of this period in anatomy (e.g., using dissection of corpses to facilitate direct observation of the body) necessary to earn the point for this type of synthesis.
 - "New studies of anatomy and mathematics allowed humanists to glorify the individual in art... Because of the anatomy advances artists learned how to recreate a human accurately..."
- The response shows hint of art historical analysis, but fails to utilize the terminology, concepts, and methods of art historians necessary to earn a point for this type of synthesis.
 - "Artists and writers of the renaissance exemplified the beauty of the human person by focusing on man's physical and intellectual aspects. One such of these artists was Michelangelo. With his sculpture David, he focused on the beauty of man which had before been unattempted. His sculpture showed a new sense of appreciation of the human person."

Supplemental Information

Topics likely to be seen in the essays:

- New conceptions of the individual: humanism, secularism, individualism, materialism, glorification of humanity, glorification of the human body/beauty, antiquity/rebirth of classical values and ideals
- Art: visual art (painting, sculpture, architecture), literature
- Artists: Michelangelo, Botticelli, Leonardo da Vinci, Castiglione, Donatello, Brunelleschi, van Eyck, Dürer
- Works: Mona Lisa (da Vinci); David, Sistine Chapel (Michelangelo); Birth of Venus (Botticelli); David (Donatello); School of Athens (Raphael); The Book of the Courtier (Castiglione); The Prince (Machiavelli); The Praise of Folly (Erasmus); Dome of the Cathedral of Florence (Brunelleschi)
- Concepts: revival of classical texts, Christian rebirth through scholarship, new educational program, idea that individuals are capable of improvement, civic engagement (civic humanism)

Scoring Guidelines and Notes for Long Essay Question 3

Analyze the ways in which the arts in the period from 1870 to 1939 reflected new conceptions of the individual.

Curriculum Framework Alignment

Learning Objectives	PP-14 Explain how industrialization elicited critiques from artists, socialists, worker's movements, and feminist organizations. OS-8 Explain the emergence, spread, and questioning of scientific, technological, and positivist approaches to addressing social problems. OS-10 Analyze the means by which individualism, subjectivity, and emotion came to be considered a valid source of knowledge. OS-12 Analyze how artists used strong emotions to express individuality and political theorists encouraged emotional identification with the nation. OS-13 Explain how and why modern artists began to move away from realism and toward abstraction and the nonrational, rejecting traditional aesthetics.

Scoring Guidelines

Maximum Possible Points: 6

Please note:

- Each point of the rubric is earned independently, e.g. a student could earn the point for synthesis without earning the point for thesis.
- Unique evidence from the student response is required to earn each point, e.g., evidence in the student response that qualifies for either of the targeted skill points, could not be used to earn the point for thesis.

A. THESIS (1 POINT)

Targeted Skill: Argumentation (E1)

- 1 point Presents a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim and responds to all parts of the question. The thesis must consist of one or more sentences located in one place, either in the introduction or the conclusion.
- 0 points Does not present a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim and responds to all parts of the question.

B. ARGUMENT DEVELOPMENT: USING THE TARGETED HISTORICAL THINKING SKILL (2 POINTS)

Targeted Skill: Argumentation (E2 and E3) and Causation (D1 and D2)

- 1 point Describes the ways in which the historical development specified in the prompt was different from and similar to developments that preceded AND followed.
- 1 point Explains the extent to which the historical development specified in the prompt was different from and similar to developments that preceded AND followed.
- 0 points Does not describe the ways in which the historical development specified in the prompt was different from and similar to developments that preceded AND followed.

Scoring Note:

- If the prompt requires discussion of both causes and effects — as this one does — responses must address both causes and effects in order to earn either point.

C. ARGUMENT DEVELOPMENT: USING EVIDENCE (2 POINTS)

Targeted Skill: Argumentation (E2 and E3)

- 1 point Addresses the topic of the question with specific examples of relevant evidence.
- 1 point Utilizes specific examples of evidence to fully and effectively substantiate the stated thesis or a relevant argument.
- 0 points Does not address the topic of the question with specific examples of relevant evidence.

Scoring Note:

- To fully and effectively substantiate the stated thesis or a relevant argument, responses must include a broad range of evidence that, through analysis and explanation, justifies the stated thesis or a relevant argument.

D. SYNTHESIS (1 POINT)

Targeted Skill: Synthesis (C4, C5, or C6)

- 1 point Extends the argument by explaining the connections between the argument and one of the following:
- a) A development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area.
 - b) A course theme and/or approach to history that is not the focus of the essay (such as political, economic, social, cultural, or intellectual history).
 - c) A different discipline or field of inquiry (such as economics, government and politics, art history, or anthropology) (Note: For World and European History only).
- 0 points Does not extend the argument by explaining the connections between the argument and the other areas listed.

Scoring Note:

- The synthesis point requires an explanation of the connections to different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area, and is not awarded for merely a phrase or reference.

On Accuracy: The components of this rubric each require that students demonstrate historically defensible content knowledge. Given the timed nature of the exam, the essay may contain errors that do not detract from the overall quality, as long as the historical content used to advance the argument is accurate.

On Clarity: These essays should be considered first drafts and thus may contain grammatical errors. Those errors will not be counted against a student unless they obscure the successful demonstration of the content knowledge and skills described above.

Scoring Notes

Note: Student samples are quoted verbatim and may contain grammatical errors.

Note: Each point can be earned independently.

A. Thesis (1 point)

Responses earn one point by presenting a thesis that makes a historically defensible claim that responds to all parts of the question (1 point).

While the thesis does not need to be a single sentence, it does need to be discrete, meaning it cannot be pieced together from across multiple places within the essay. It can be located in either the introduction or the conclusion, but not split between the two.

Acceptable thesis statements create an argument that responds to both of the following tasks:

- identifying relevant new conceptions of the individual in the period from 1870 to 1939, and
- explaining artistic manifestations of these conceptions

The thesis needs to address both causes (new conceptions of the individual) as well as effects (artistic manifestations of these conceptions).

Examples of acceptable thesis:

- “Art movement’s Realism, Post-Impressionism, Surrealism, and Dadaism portrayed the individual as changing from grim and hardworking to uncertain alone and broken.”
- “Jazz music in the 1920s and art during the Age of Anxiety represented a shift towards individualism in the west while the propaganda art of World War I and Communist Russia showed growing belief of nationalism over the individual in the east and Germany.”
- “The loss of innocence in an individual gave way to existentialism, which paved a clear road to modern movements in the art which stressed conformity of an individual.”

Unacceptable examples of thesis:

- “Changing philosophical ideas were expressed in all of these philosophical ideas regarding newly defined roles of the individual were expressed in all art forms.”
- “Each time period the art showed the change from group to nature to individual with new form of art.”
- “Within these movements artists contributed to the talent and genius of the individual.”

B. Argument Development: Using the Targeted Historical Thinking Skill (2 points)

Note: If the prompt requires discussion of both causes and effects — as this one does — responses must address both causes and effects in order to earn either point.

a) Argument Development — Describes

Responses earn one point by describing the ways in which new conceptions of the individual in the period from 1870 to 1939 (causes) affected the artistic manifestations of this period (effects). (1 point)

Examples of acceptable description of causes and effects:

- Realism was shaped by brutality of war and society's ability to see and experience it.
- Various forms of music (such as jazz) and artistic styles (such as Dadaism, surrealism, and cubism) represented the change in values from conformist to nonconformist.
- Dehumanizing violence of World War I led to disillusionment as depicted in various art forms.
- Changing ideas about the role of the individual in society brought about by World War I shaped the philosophy and literature of existentialism.
- Impact of Freud's ideas of subconscious on abstract forms of art.

Examples of unacceptable description of causes and effects:

- Confusion of cause and effect, showing art as the cause and new conceptions of individuals as the effect: "The abstract paintings were different in that they changed the conception of the individual."
- Using examples from the wrong time period:
 - "Romantic works such as Walden or paintings that were at ease really reflected what people were like during this time. They emphasized more value in art, nature, and a simpler life in general."
 - Romantic works of Hugo, Shelly, and Dickens.

b) Argument Development — Explains

Responses can earn the point here by explaining the reasons for new conceptions of the individual (causes) AND explaining how the new conceptions manifested themselves through the arts (effects). (1 point)

Examples of acceptable explanation of reasons for causes and effects:

- The response links new forms of music and art to dissatisfaction with the war.
 - "There was also this new type of music, which instead of harmonious music, was in disharmony. This new art, called surrealism reflected the views of the people very well because at that time, they didn't want to conform with society. This is because at that time, World War I was going on, and people wanted to show their dissatisfaction with the war by doing art that was the social norm."
- The response links Otto Dix's depictions of war nightmares with the alienation felt by many former soldiers in the post-war world.
 - "The human use of technology for violent, destructive ends, inspired artists like Otto Dix, who sought to portray the atrocities of war and the relative insignificance of the individual in a war that killed millions."

- The response links Dadaism and twelve-tone music to the perceptions of the randomness of life provoked by WWI.
 - “Dadaism and twelve-tone music were two different arts provoked by this feeling. A random array of notes, or collage of different styles of art reflected better how people felt. They felt their individual selves to be lost in a crazy world.”
- The response links existentialism and the writings of Sartre to the loss of optimism caused by World War I.
 - “The aftermath of WWI caused all people to reexamine their purpose in life, and how much control they had in the world. Reflected in the ideas of Jean Paul Sarte was the idea of existentialism; this idea stated that humans were in charge of defining their own reality, meaning, and morals in life through their actions and choices. Sarte’s ideas also followed a general trend that was growing throughout Europe in which optimism in the rational mind was falling.”

Examples of unacceptable explanation of reasons for causes and effects:

- Causes and effects may be stated but offered without further development.
 - The War
 - National unity
 - The Age of Anxiety
 - “War art became more centered around people.”
- Causes and effects may be incorrect or not be linked to the thesis
 - “Composers started these works to show how there needs to be unity among the people in each country.”
- Responses may present art as a cause for the change in concepts of the individual, and not as an effect.
 - “That is why throughout this period Impressionism strengthened the conceptions regarding the individual.”

C. Argument Development: Using Evidence (2 points)

a) Using Evidence — Examples

Responses can earn one point by addressing the topic of the question by referring to specific examples or relevant evidence (1 point). Essays can earn this point without having a stated thesis or a relevant argument.

Examples of specific evidence that could be used to address the topic of the question:

- Examples of various art forms such as jazz music, impressionism, surrealism, Dadaism, Cubism, etc.
- Examples of specific works of art or artists, such as Dali, Gauguin, Van Gogh, Picasso, etc.
- Examples of specific thinkers, writers, or philosophies, such as Sartre, Freud, etc.
- Examples of specific philosophies or ideologies, such as Social Darwinism, Existentialism, Nationalism and war propaganda, etc.

Examples of unsuccessfully using evidence to address the topic of the question:

- The response gives an example of Impressionism but the argument is not defined in terms of the link between Impressionism and individual vision.
- The chronology in the response is incorrect:
 - Stating that impressionism came after WWI and went back to Romantic ideas.
 - “The early 1900s brought about a new set of entertainment in the television and magazines. Everywhere people’s opinions about the acceptable norms were being changed.”
- The argument is too general: “The art became random and depicted how everyone was feeling.”

b) Using Evidence — Effective Substantiation

Responses earn a separate point by utilizing specific examples of evidence to fully and effectively substantiate a thesis or relevant argument about how the arts reflected new conceptions of the individuals in the period from 1870 to 1939 (1 point). Fully and effectively substantiating the thesis goes beyond merely providing many examples. This point is earned by clearly and consistently linking significant evidence to the argument and showing how the evidence demonstrates how arts reflected new conceptions of the individual in the period from 1870 to 1939.

Examples of evidence that could be utilized to substantiate an argument:

- This response explains how multiple different forms of new art reflected the uncertainty that characterized the post-World War I world.
 - “Some branches of art, such as surrealism and dadaism emphasized the futility of man’s existence and the nonsense of it all. They were also influenced by World War I. The immense loss of life had never been seen before, and it shook people’s belief that life has meaning and purpose. Salvador Dali’s, “The Persistence of Memory” (which depicts a surrealist landscape and melting pocket watches) could be a reference to the fact that the impacts of World War I will never go away. Cubists portray the individual as fragmented. While that is a stylistic choice, it could have deeper meaning, reflecting the brokenness of modern man (woman). Dadaism portrayed the individual as nonsensical, and they went against any type of socially accepted art. Overall, the surrealists, Dadaists, and cubists show the individual as conflicted and alone in a harsh and unforgiving reality.”
- This response explains how early 20th century philosophies, literature, and art focused on the psychological tensions of this period.
 - “This period of time gave rise to Nihilism, the idea that an individual is the only body that matters in a world where purpose of life is not apparent. Because of this concept, brought to life partly by the new science of psychology and the literature of Nietzsche, artforms began to express this glorification of the individual, and the mystery behind its purpose. Stream of consciousness literature developed at this time. In this technique, the rambling and musings of a writer continued on, writing what came to mind. The desire of delving to one's mind, created by Nihilism, harbored this writing style. In addition, in post-impressionistic art, psychological aspects of the artist began to become the focal point of art, as to determine the purpose of an individual artist or audience member."

- Although this response does not concisely explain the new conceptions of the individual in this period (and has a few inaccuracies), it does draw on multiple examples of art, philosophy, and literature and tie them to changes in this period:
 - "Paul Gauguin, in Barbaric Tales, portrays two Polynesian women with a European man who seems to be looking at them with a combination of lust and amusement. Paintings and other works of art similar to these were effective in displaying the interactions between the people of colonies and those who believed they were superior, and the new conceptions of the individual this brought. Functionalism also developed during this time period. It portrayed the belief that things should be built to do their jobs the best possible without the need to be pleasing in the looks. This functionalism stemmed from new beliefs about the individual and their role in society that focused more on realism than beliefs in God and other ideas. Trench poetry and stream of consciousness novels also came about during this time period. Trench poetry was deeply effected by new perceptions of individuals and war which soldiers gain in living through life in the trenches in World War I. Following the horrors of war, stream of consciousness writers, such as Virginia Woolf, wrote the free flowing thoughts of the characters in their books. This development in literature reflect new conceptions about psychology of the individual that were developed during this period. Painting was also influenced by new psychological conceptions during this period. Sigmund Freud's developments and beliefs about how the human mind function greatly impacted the work of Salvador Dali."

Examples of unsuccessfully attempting to substantiate an argument with evidence:

- The response utilizes evidence that is beyond the chronological scope or out of context.
 - The characters in Mary Shelly's Frankenstein (written in 1818) as evidence of the alienation felt during the time 1870–1939.
 - Romanticism as a rejection of Reason.

D. Synthesis (1 point)

Responses earn a point for synthesis by extending their argument in one of three possible ways (1 point).

- a) Responses can extend their argument by explaining the connections between their argument and a development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area. (Synthesis proficiency C4). These connections must consist of more than just a phrase or reference.

Examples of synthesis by connecting the argument to a development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area:

- The response discusses Romanticism as a product of early 19th century conditions and uses it to contrast with conditions in the 1870–1939 period.
- The response discusses the rise of jazz in the United States and links its appeal to Europeans to the milieu of the 1920s.

Example that did not accurately connect the argument to a development in a different historical period, situation, era, or geographical area:

- Passing reference to or fleeting mention of another time period
- b) Responses can extend their argument by explaining the connections between their argument and a course theme and/or approach to history that is not the focus of the essay (such as political, economic, social, cultural, or intellectual history). (Synthesis proficiency C5) These connections must consist of more than just a phrase or reference.

Examples of synthesis by connecting the argument to a different course theme or approach to history:

- This response draws upon the political turmoil of the post-World War I world to extend the argument. It links the bleak outlook and alienation felt by many after WWI to the appeal of radical political movements that challenged the status quo and stressed conformity through the use of propaganda:
 - “World War I was the bloodiest and most costly war that the world had ever seen (until WWII). The battles were long and grueling, and after the war was ended and the harsh peace imposed on Germany was finalized, individuals had turned away from a hopeful world. New art movements like existentialism stressed the hopelessness of the world, strengthened by scientific discoveries by Einstein and Freud. An individual having to face the loss of loved-ones as well as an economic recession that had impacted much of the world embraced these views with open arms, leading the average individual to become more bitter to controversies such as race and religion. The arts at this time were also used as propaganda machines by various leaders and dictators of the world. People like Adolf Hitler used this pessimistic and blind anger that had taken a hold of people to his advantage to solidify and gain power.”

Examples that did not accurately connect the argument to a different course theme or approach to history:

- The essay mentions that Hitler was an artist but does nothing more with the information.
 - The essay mentions propaganda but provides no additional discussion.
- c) Response can extend their argument by explaining the connections between their argument and a different discipline or field of inquiry. (Synthesis proficiency C6) These connections must consist of more than just a phrase or reference.

Examples of synthesis by connecting the argument to a different discipline or field of inquiry:

- The response traces economic developments in Europe during the 1920s, gains made by the middle class as a result of the new prosperity and the social changes resulting from the war, and links those to changing concepts of individualism:
 - “The flapper and the idea of the ‘modern girl’ who earned her own money, made her own decisions, and looked fabulous helped to influence the way women saw themselves.”
- The response discusses advances in science (Max Planck or Einstein’s theory of relativity) and links the idea of multiple perspectives on reality to new developments in art, such as cubism:
 - “Also, the publication of Einstein’s relativity theory in 1905 and Planck’s discoveries, the idea of multiple perspectives gave rise to cubism and uncertainty with more than one possible perspective to interpretation.”

Examples that did not accurately connect the argument to a different discipline or field of inquiry:

- The response states that economics were important in the period 1870–1939.
- The response mentions that there were important scientific discoveries in the period 1870–1939.
